TO MARY.

TO MISS MARY E. H.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY "DOBBS."

Mary, my friend, within a few short days
You'll be a wife; a happy one, no doubt;
The happiness that mutual love repays,
The happiness that none can do without.
With him on whom your choice for life is made,
You're starting on life's journey hand in hand;
Let both, in strength of purpose, be arrayed
And love each other—Heaven's high command.

I wish you joy—'tis all that I can say;
'Tis all the offering that I can give,
And as the years so swiftly pass away,
I hope that both a happy life may live;
Live for each other honestly and true.
Throw pride, and jealousy, and hatred bye,
Work for each other as both can only do,
And leave the rest to Him who rules on high.

From maidenhood to wife is but a step,
But 'tis a step that's fraught with many cares;
Its joys and sorrows you must both accept—
Marriage at best is but a field of tares.
But may your married life bloom with each year
Brighter and happier as time rolls o'er,
Drawing to each other and to God more near,
Until you stand upon the other shore.

LILY WILTON;

OR,

THE FALSE LOVE AND THE TRUE.

For a half hour or so there was an indescribable scene of appalling terror and confusion, made up of smoke and fire, a rush of water, shrieks, and blackness overhead, and a wind that tore all before it—then suddenly there was comparative calm. The boats had picked up nearly all the crew and passengers, and the deserted ship burned and drifted before the slackening tempest.

Mrs. Clara Aldrich glanced over the boat when she first began to recover from the confusion and terror, and a deep breath of relief heaved her bosom as she saw that Mrs. Wilton was not there. The next instant she shuddered at the unformed thought in her mind. Perhaps Lily Wilton was in the other boat. She did not wish her ill, but she was glad—yes, she would say it to herself—she was glad that the siren who had stolen her husband's fancy was not in the boat with them.

Ned Wilton was at the other end of the boat, half senseless from a blow on the head. He had jumped overboard with his wife, among the first, and caught a spar. As they clung to that something had struck him and made him loose his hold. She had still held on, and perhaps the other boat had picked her up. So thought Clara Aldrich as she clung to her husband in the crowded boat and whispered "Thank Heaven, Charles, we are saved!" and hid her face that she might not see the burning ship and the angry waves.

She felt him start.

"There she is! Save her!" he cried out, and started up so as to almost throw his wife from him. "There is Lily Wilton!"

The wife lifted herself, and leaning her hand on his shoulder, looked off to where he pointed, while one of the sailors threw the rope.

Two women struggled in the water not far away, one a servant of one of the lady passengers, the other the woman whom her husband had turned away from his own wife for.

The rope was thrown and was caught by the servant. She held by it, and reached it back to the lady behind her. Not all her danger and fear could make her forget humanity. But the other woman was different. Terror of death, longing for life, and utter selfishness possessed her. She caught the rope and eagerly wound it about her, pushing the hand that had helped her till its hold was loosened. Lily Wilton saw Charles Aldrich's face in the boat, and thought that he had thrown the rope out for her.

In a few minutes she was drawn on board, but the other woman disappeared. Some thought that they saw an arm and head and a broken spar among the waves; but the boat was overloaded, and the ship was drifting fast wards them. They could not wait. It is hard to think anything out till of the motives of one who is tormenting us, and Clara Aldrich had but little charity for the woman whose life had just been saved.

She could not help thinking that Lily was not so overcome as she pretended to be. To be sure, she had been in the water fifteen or twenty minutes, and had been well frightened, but many of the others were wet, and all as frightened, and there was no reason why they should all attend to her as if she was the only sufferer.

She thought, too, that it would look better if Mrs. Wilton would control herself and try to do something for her husband, instead of crying out that she could not bear the sight of wounds or blood, and keeping herself in that part of the boat farthest from him.

"I dare not move," said she, looking up with tearful eyes into Charles Aldrich's face. "The boat is so full I am afraid we shall be swamped. Besides, I am so faint!" and she dropped her cheek into her hand, her head close to his knee.

He colored slightly as he looked down upon her. If they had been alone he might have been pleased, but he was rather embarrassed to have her show that tender, clinging fondness before a score of persons, every one of whom had, he well knew, cast critical eyes on his late intercourse with her. Besides, easily flattered and influenced by women as Charles Aldrich was, he was not without principle and a sense of propriety, and he was rather shocked to see this captivating creature ignore her husband as she did.

Still, she looked very beautiful, and she seemed to love him. How easy it is to forgive the fault which arises from love for one's self! The boat drifted for a few hours, and was seen by a steamer, and the passengers were taken up.

"We have already picked up a woman who was almost gone," said the captain of the steamer. It was an hour before she spoke, or moved, and now she is not able to tell us anything."

"It must be my poor Jane, who was with Mrs. Wilton," exclaimed Mrs. Stevens. "We taought she was surely drowned. Let me see her at once."

Lily Wilton's face reddened.

"Oh! how I hope it is!" she said, with enthusiasm. "Then we shall all be safe. Do let me go down with you, Mrs. Stevens, and see if it is she."

"She may well hope that, for it saves her from a guilt but little short of murder," muttered Mrs. Aldrich, looking after the two as they went away.

"Why, Clara, what do you mean?" her husband exclaimed, almost angrily.

She cast her eyes on him, then looked coldly away.

"I mean what I say," she answered. "The sailor who threw the rope says that Mrs. Stevens' servant caught it first, and held the end to Mrs. Wilton, and that Mrs. Wilton pulled it away from her, pushing her hands off."

"I don't believe it!" the husband said, impulsively.

Mrs. Aldrich felt choking between grief and indignation. Only three years married, yet her husband not only gazed fascinated at another woman, but insulted his wife with rude speech in that woman's defence. She could not speak during the first moment, and in the second she would not.

"I think the sailor must have been mistaken," the husband said, ashamed and uneasy. "And it isn't like you, Clara, to believe the worst of a person without full proof."

She made him no reply, but, wrapping her shawl about her, descended to the cabin, which had been put at the disposal of the shipwrecked ladies. The next morning they arrived at their destination, and with mutual congratulations and thanks separated to their homes.

"Do come soon to see me," Mrs. Wilton begged sweetly of Mrs. Aldrich, "I shall be so confined to Ned, you know, and he will be lonely. The doctor says he must keep the house a fortnight at least."

The invitation was given to the wife, apparently, but a swift glance into the face of the husband showed that he was included. He smiled acquiescence, and Mrs. Aldrich murmured a cold "Thank you!" and gave no invitation in return.

Mrs. Stevens passed them by, leading her maid, who walked faintly, as if unable to stand. A mark on her forehead showed where the waves had tossed some hard object against her, and her face was perfectly haggard. Both passed by without appearing to see Mrs. Wilton. Mrs. Aldrich started eagerly forward and took the sufferer by the hand.

"I am so glad to see you able to walk, Jane!" she said. "So glad of your escape, I would not go down to see you yesterday, because I feared to hurt you."

The woman smiled gratefully, and muttered a word of thanks in a voice scarcely audible. But, as she glanced past the lady, and saw who stood near her, her countenance changed.

"That monster!" she muttered, and hurried away.

Mrs. Aldrich turned just in time to catch the last words of a short conversation.

"You will come to see Ned—and me?" asked a soft, coaxing voice.

"Yes."

Was a yes it was! Never in the days of their courtship had Clara Aldrich's lover addressed her in a tone of more impassioned tenderness. The fleeting glance he gave was as tender as the tone. He knew well that both betrayed too much, for when he met his wife's eyes his own shrank.

She turned abruptly away from him, walked to the wharf without assistance, and stepped into the first carriage that was offered her.

"Drive me home immediately!" she said, and gave the driver her address.

Her heart swelled to breaking. She was too miserable to care who saw or made comments. If Charles chose to stay and escort that woman and her husband he might; she would not wait for him. She felt then that she could never again trust him, never speak pleasantly to him, never care to speak to him at all.

A miserable month followed. The husband and wife lived almost like strangers together. He had made some efforts at reconciliation, but she was too distrustful and too unhappy to respond to them, for she knew that scarcely a day passed that did not find him spending some little time at least at Ned Wilton's.

"It was such a fine excuse, Ned's illness," she thought, bitterly.

She walked uneasily about her room one evening. She was alone. Her husband was at his usual haunt, she supposed, and her powers of endurance were at an end.

"I can bear it no longer!" she exclaimed, passionately. "I will not live with him. I have my parents' home to go back to, and there at least all is love. Why should I wait till he becomes abusive, so that the world may justify me? Blows could not hurt me more than his neglect and his love for that woman. To think that I sit here alone and he is with her—perhaps alone with her.

She clasped her hands and wrung them in an agony of jealousy. There was a hand on the door-knob, and she only just quieted herself as her husband entered the room. Her heart gave a joyful throb at sight of him, but she turned away and seated herself by the work table. He approached slowly and took a chair opposite her, looking at her earnestly. How pale and proud she looked! What shadows had settled under her sweet eyes during the last few weeks! How new was that compression of her lips, ever before so smiling! Charles Aldrich felt himself a villain.

"Clara," he said, softly, "let's forget it all, and begin anew."

He tried to turn it off even now with a laugh, to save his pride and hide his embarrassment. The wife, whose heart had been tortured, felt little enough like laughing.

"I do not understand what you mean," she said, with cold quietness, only just glancing at him, then dropping her eyes again.

She did not now trust him enough to submit and give him back her love without knowing on what grounds she was required to feel herself safe.

"You have been angry with me on account of Mrs. Wilton," he said, with an unsteady voice. "Cannot you forget your jealousy of her?"

"I have no reason to forget it," she said, tremulously, though she tried to speak in a calm tone. "No disease is cured till the cause is removed."

"The cause is removed," he replied.

She glanced at him quickly, and did not understand his confusion. That he should be ashamed at being arraigned on such a charge she could well believe; but his shame might also mean something else. Her trust had gone. She could not do now as in the happy days of old, when, if a little cloud ever came between them, she threw herself into his arms at the first word, and took to herself all the blame. She cast her eyes down and remained silent. Again he sat looking wistfully at her and bitterly regretting his folly. If she had been reconciled as easily as in the old time, which he also recollected, he might have viewed his offence lightly, but, seeing what it had done for her, it looked in his eyes what it was—a cruel and unprincipled outrage on one who loved and trusted him and had a paramount claim on his love and trust.

"Clara," he burst forth, at length, "you cannot believe that I love or ever loved Lily Wilton?"

Her face flushed up, and her blue eyes sparkled as she raised them.

"I have as much reason to believe that you loved me before we were married. The signs were the same. One is no more false than the other."

For one instant he seemed to be on the point of anger, but conscience and his rewakened love for his wife checked the feeling.

"Clara," he said, "let me confess all to you. You have reason to complain, and I will not attempt to justify myself, for a married man has no right to allow himself to be fascinated by any woman not his wife. I was fascinated by her, led on by degrees till I became more interested than I realized. A man may be true to his wife, yet think that other women may be excellent. I thought her perfect. Don't despise me, Clara. I see now what an actress she was; and I was an idiot. But I did not purpose any wrong. It was a pleasure to see her, and, as I thought her far removed from everything low and mean, I felt safe. Schoolboy like, I fancied that she was going to exercise an elevating influence over me. Then, dear, your jealousy helped it along, because the thought that you wronged her made her appear greater and you less in my eyes. But now I know her, and, Clara, I am ashamed of myself."

The young wife would not yield yet. She averted her eyes to hide the brightness of them, and steadied her voice to ask:—

"What has effected this wonderful change?"

He colored deeply. It was hard to think what a dupe he had been.

"I suppose you think that I have been at her house often since we arrived," he said.

"Have you not?" she asked, quickly.

"I have been there once only," he replied.

"Oh, Charles! Why did you not tell me?" was her involuntary exclamation.

"You gave me no chance to tell you, dear," he said, drawing his chair to her side and taking her hand.

She suffered him to keep it, but did not yield yet. He had been there!

"I had been there not more than ten minutes, talking with her and Ned," he resumed, "when the door opened unceremoniously, and in walked Mrs. Stevens' maid, Jane. I was astonished at her appearance, and still more astonished when Mrs. Wilton turned pale and started up as if to put her out of the room. She recollected herself, though, and invited her to sit down.

"'Jane turned to me. 'I have come here to see you,' she said, 'and tell you of this woman, whom everybody says you are in love with.' At that, and all through what she said, Mrs. Wilton lost all control of herself, and tried to put her out. But she finished what she had to say.

"'That woman pushed my hands from the rope,' she said, 'and when I said 'I shall drown!' she answered, 'Drown, then!' and when I tried to catch at the rope as I went down she kicked me.' It wasn't so much what she said that shocked me, Clara, for in desperate fear of death one may not know what one does, but it was what Mrs. Wilton said. 'You speak falsely!' she cried out, fiercely, and, Clara, she slapped the woman's face. I don't like to think of it. The sight of one whom I had been led to believe a model of softness and dignity talking and acting like a vulgar termagant cured me."

There was silence for a moment, then the husband asked:—

"Can you trust me again, Clara?"

She looked up at him with tearful, tender eyes.

"You have ceased to care for her, but some other one will win you again."

"No!" he exclaimed, quickly. "I should never again like a woman who tried to captivate me, however beautiful and excellent she might be. If ever any woman except yourself should begin to smile on me in the future, I shall remember Lily Wilton and the wreck of the 'Osprey.'"

Clara Aldrich leaned on her husband's bosom, tender, happy, yet sighing. Such a pain is not easily forgotten, such a trust once broken not easily restored; but she forgave and loved him, and as years proved how true his promise had been, she learned to date her highest happiness from the wreck of the "Osprey."

END OF THE GAMBLING SPAS.—With the last day of the past month the gambling tables of Hombourg, Spa, Wiesbaden, Baden, Ems, Nauheim, Wiebad and Wildungen were to be closed forevermore. Meseieurs will no more make their game there. Wrinkled dowagers will have to find some other occupation than sitting there, painted and powdered, and hovering over the piles of Napoleons like hungry hawks over their prey. The smug and impassive croupiers will have to find a new field in which to exhibit their sang froid. What will become of them? Fortunes will no longer be made and lost in the turn of a card. That ubiquitous Russian prince who dropped out in the columns of Galignani so often, as the breaker of banks, will disappear from view. Much misery will be done away with and none will be the worse for it, unless it be the hotel keepers, who charged so exorbitantly and gave so little for it. The contractors for tables have been asking themselves in what country they will be allowed to continue their disgraceful trade, when both Belgium and Germany are closed to them. France, in spite of the mediation of M. Ernest Feydeau and of the Figaro, has turned a deaf ear to their prayers, and the depth of their despair, says the Pall Mall Gazette, may be guessed from the fact that they have now sent in an application to the government of Russia. It is not at St. Petersburg or Moscow that the discomfitted gambling impresarios propose to recoup themselves for their coming losses. Keeping themselves as close to Germany as possible, they desire to open a bank at a little town with an unpronounceable name, on the other side of the Prussian frontier, in the kingdom of Poland. The name in question is written "Tsiekhotainek." The place is celebrated for its mud baths, and the Russian government has already declined the proposal to make it the seat of a gaming establishment.

A MARSEILLES BULL FIGHT.—It appears by the Semaphore of Marseilles that bull fights have recently come into vogue in that famous seaport. Those of the inhabitants who participated in this amusement one day about a month ago are not likely to forget it in a hurry. When a young and "game" bull of great tossing power was brought out with a view of its proceeding into the circus, something occurred to give the animal a distaste for the arena where he was to be worried to make a Marseilles display, and with a bound he plunged into the enormous pen of people, who were massed together like clusters of bees. Of course, a most frightful panic ensued, and matters would have been ten times worse than they were had not a youth of eighteen, as agile as heroic, actually "taken the bull by the horns" and clung to him until the showmen, who seemed to have behaved very ill, came and got the enraged brute away. The conduct of the circus people irritated the rowdier part of the crowd, who proceeded to do serious damage, smashed windows in the neighborhood, and, by way of soothing the nerves of those already suffering from the proceedings of the bull, opened a stall where six others were confined, which went careering down the street. Five were at length killed and the sixth recovered by its keeper. The director of the circus has had to reimburse the owners of surrounding property for damage done to it.

VERY SAD.—A singular circumstance attended the death of a Monroe gentleman, which occurred recently. Last winter he made an agreement with his wife to the effect that, should she kindle the fire mornings for six months, he would do it for the same length of time. She had just commenced her part of the contract when he died. It is a very sad affair.

A FRAGMENT.

"And, I shall dare to hope, my friend—
Tho' far apart we be—
That thou will sometimes think of one
Who ever thinks of thee."—G. A. F.

'Tis years since we two met and parted;
Yet thine image still radiantly beams;
And thoughts of thee come like the visions
That linger o'er me in dreams;
'Tis years since our two paths have parted,
Since our lips breath'd that last sad "Good by;
And I read more than friendship at parting,
In the glance of your tear-moisten'd eye.

Lonely years have roll'd on—yet how fondly
Memory plumes her swift pinions to-night,
And back o'er the past softly soaring,
Revisits those scenes of delight;
Fond fancy in warm colors paints thee,
As then we ever can touched thy form;
And my lone heart more lonely grows, dreaming,
Of "what might have been," and what is now.

Ah! well, we are friends if not lovers;
And for the best 'was, perhaps that 'tis so,
But of life's rarest hours mine are sleeping
To-night, with the long, long ago.
Yet, on the dim wings of memory,
Thine image still radiantly beams,
And thoughts of thee hover e'er round me,
And bless me at night in my dreams.

A PROFESSIONAL DUELIST;

OR,

ACROSS THE HANDKERCHIEF.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BY P. H. MARCELLUS.

The following incident was related to me some time since by an officer in the navy, a former shipmate of mine and an intimate friend, who was himself, as he tells me, a witness of a portion of this remarkable affair. He assures me that it is fact, to the letter; and, knowing him so well, I can likewise vouch for its authenticity. I give it as received, almost verbatim, merely changing the names.

One of the most affluent merchants of Kingston, on the island of Jamaica, had, one day, some thirty odd guests to dinner. The company waxed blithe and merry, and at dessert Captain Dunbar, a Scotchman, was requested to sing one of his own native Caledonian ballads. The Captain declined, with the assurance that he knew not a single one by heart, and that otherwise he would have acquiesced.

A former planter of St. Domingo, by the name of Latour, an exceedingly vicious and malignant individual, hereupon persisted boisterously that Dunbar should sing.

To put an end to this unpleasant scene, the latter smilingly demanded a few moments' time for reflection; then, after having assumed a mien as if he were ransacking his memory, he announced that he would sing "The Lady of the Scottish Hills." But, instead of this, he, in reality, sang some pretty German air. Be it known, that Dunbar had made several voyages to Germany, and thus acquired a fair knowledge of that tongue.

Latour, like most of the guests, with the exception of some three or four, knew nothing of either German or Gallic, and, in the stormy applause which followed the rendition of the song, he made more noise than anyone else. Soon after, the party separated.

The Captain, accompanied by an American friend, a certain Mr. Langdon, started for the wharf, where lay his vessel, ready to sail for Europe. On the way, the conversation turned upon Latour.

"I complied apparently with his demand," said Dunbar, "because a contrary course would certainly have wrought unpleasant results. Even now, were some busybody to discover to him the pardonable deception I practiced, who knows what he might do? I know the man. What astonishes me greatly is that persons who respect themselves can open their doors to a man of such evil notoriety. This wretch, who has passed his whole life in practicing with the pistol, has at least twenty deaths upon his conscience, if he possesses such an article. For him it is a pastime to kill his fellow-creatures, and it is not enough for him to do this, but he must also vilify those whom his bullets have struck. He plumes himself upon the number of his victims, whist I, who, many years ago, blinded by jealousy, had the misfortune to kill at a duel a man who was my rival and bitter enemy, am tormented by stings of conscience which I will never be able to banish."

They had arrived at the quay, and Langdon would now have parted from his friend, but the latter succeeded in persuading him to visit his ship. They entered a boat, and in five minutes were aboard the captain's craft. Remaining on deck, they observed, shortly after their arrival, another boat push off from the shore.

Dunbar suddenly started, and, after straining his eyes to make sure they did not deceive him, exclaimed:—

"It is Major Bishop, by Jupiter!"

"Who is he?" inquired Langdon.

"An officer in the service of the Republic of Venezuela, and a worthy friend of the duelist Latour. See, he is approaching us. I can guess the object of his visit."

The boat was now alongside, and Bishop rapidly ascended the gangway ladder.

"Have I the honor," he asked, "of addressing Captain Dunbar?"

"That is my name, sir."

"Then have the goodness, sir, to read this note."

Dunbar opened the epistle, and read:

"You practised an imposition upon me to-day, in regard to which I have just been enlightened. You must give me satisfaction. My friend, Major Bishop, will act for me.

EMILE LATOUR."

"Tell your friend," said Dunbar to the major, "that I positively refuse to have anything to do with him."

"Very well, sir," said Bishop, smiling sardonically. He then quickly left the ship.

"People may comment upon my course as they will," said Dunbar to his friend, "but I cannot see the honor either in being the twenty-first victim of this man, or in polluting my hands with the blood of such a wretch."

An hour thereafter he returned to the shore, in order to arrange his final business, prior to setting sail. Langdon accompanied him. The captain had scarcely set his foot upon the wharf, when he received a blow from a riding-whip, full in the face.

Latour had been lying in wait for him. Mounting a horse instantly after delivering the cut, he quickly galloped off. Dunbar was almost frenzied with rage. With difficulty Langdon succeeded in taking him to his hotel. Arrived here, Dunbar exclaimed, with terrible deliberation:—

"I am resolved. At the cost of my life I shall rid the earth of this abominable scoundrel. Will you be my second, Langdon?"

"You may depend upon me."

"Thanks, my friend. The duel takes place this evening at six, close by the cove behind the Iguana rock. Pistols. Go now and tell this Latour I accept his challenge. The exact terms he will learn on the ground. There will be two graves dug to-morrow instead of one, as he anticipates."

The captain then left the hotel to seek fresh air and locomotion, in order to calm himself. Langdon wended his way towards Latour's lodgings.

"Captain Dunbar," he said, upon entering, "has commissioned me to inform you that he accepts your challenge."

"At last. I am surprised that a man of his station has to be forced to demean himself like a man of honor."

"No unnecessary words, sir. Pistols, six this evening, behind the rock of Iguana. Adieu."

At the stipulated time a strange scene was presented at the base of the black promontory of Iguana.

A few steps from the shore lay a heap of freshly shoveled earth. The two contestants, Dunbar and Latour, stood on either side of a newly dug grave, each holding in one hand the corner of a handkerchief. Bishop, Langdon, and several witnesses were standing in close proximity.

Latour and his friend had not been informed of the precise terms of the duel until their arrival at the place of meeting.

The appearance and demeanor of the two principals were a fit study for the psychologist. Dunbar was omin ously tranquil, Latour paralyzed with consternation. The latter, with the experience and prestige of twenty duels, had never been engaged in one of so startling a nature, or in which the chances were so nicely balanced. It was apparently difficult for him to make himself at home in so novel a situation.

Both were to fire together, at a given signal. Langdon and Bishop loaded the pistols, and agreed to throw up a penny to decide which of them should give the fatal sign.

Bishop threw a coin into the air.

"Heads!" cried Langdon.

Heads it was. The pistols were then handed to Dunbar and Latour.

"Gentlemen, are you ready?" asked Langdon.

"Yes!" responded the two adversaries, with hollow voice.

Langdon hesitated before giving the terrible signal. Latour's agitation increased with every second. Soon his condition became a sight most abject; his features were livid and distorted, his teeth chattered violently, his whole body was shivering. Then his pistol and his end of the handkerchief dropped from his hands; his knees quaked and his legs tottered; and, finally his frame suddenly appeared to break together, and he tumbled, helpless and fainting into the grave. It seemed almost as if death had prematurely overtaken him.

When Dunbar saw to what a deplorable state his enemy had been reduced, he said:—

"Cowardly, contemptible ruffian! you are too much in need of my pity to be able to excite my resentment."

Hurling his pistol away, he left the spot, accompanied by Langdon and the witnesses. Even Major Bishop was so disgusted with the pitiful conduct of his friend that he hurried off before the latter recovered from his paroxysm of fear.

Several days afterwards, Latour disappeared from the island, and has never been heard of since.

The moral of this story is obvious. Professional duelists are, generally, nothing more than cowardly bullies. Conscious of superior physical strength or skill with deadly weapons, they scarcely ever enter into a duel without the conviction that they will come out of it unscathed. This makes them still worse than what we just termed them; they thus become murderers by profession. They arrogate to themselves that they practice the especial profession of honor and bravery, and yet, nowhere, perhaps, is there so little sterling honor and bravery displayed as amongst these very people. Place them where the odds are against them, or the chances only even, and they become as meek as lambs. True courage consists not in overcoming obstacles or achieving successes when favorable results are assured beforehand, but in opposing difficulties which are hard to surmount and facing perils which may bring destruction as well as triumph. Should the efforts of the brave and the venturesome be unavailing, and the struggle disastrous, the merit will be scarcely the less; for the honor lies more in the spirit of the deed than in the issue thereof.

There comes a friend that you'll be glad to meet. (Enter GEN'L MARS, limping, with arm in sling and patch on eye.)

MRS. JUNO.—What, General Mars! This really is a treat.
But, O, dear, law! You're wounded. Well, I saw
That fierce impetuous spirit couldn't keep from war.

GEN. MARS.—They're all at war down there, but this cheek splitter
I got in a shindy with a shoulder hitter,
Though for my prowess all mankind we know,
Glad I was glad to get off even so.

JUPE.—Now, clouds roll off in a dissolving view,
And let us have at once—

SCENE NUMBER TWO.—Cloud Palace of Jupiter, alias Jove.

JUPE (ascending throne).—Zooks! is the air infectious grown already?
Like earthly ones, my throne's become unsteady.
Now for this audience; then for forty winks,
And, Ganymede, meanwhile dispense the drinks. (GANYMEDE opens case.)
What'll you have?

ALL (clamorously).—Mine's nectar—mine's ambrosia, etc.

JUPE.—No nectar or ambrosia now for you;
Cocktails and cobblers must henceforward do. (GANYMEDE serves. Enter APOLLO as a Negro minstrel, with banjo.)

JUPE.—Way, here's our fav'rite lyric pet, Apollo.
This beats Dan Bryant and Emerson all hollow.

APOLLO (sings).—I've been upon a passeur
Among earth's gay galoots,
And if I didn't make them stare
Why you may take my boots;
I frisked about among the nymphs
Who are earth's joy and pride,
And went upon a little tear
All on the Bowery side.
I've been, etc (dances).
I've thrown away my lyre of gold,
And if I don't outdo
The Yanks at their own instruments,
Why, I'm a liar, too.
Come, stand up, darkies, in a row,
And join me in a glee—
Breakdown, jig or double shuffle,
All's de same to me!
I've have been, etc. (dances).

Enter CUPID, flashily attired, with cane, eye-glass, etc., tipsy.

CUPID (sings—Air, "I've Been Roaming").—I've been rumming, I've been rumming,
Up and down each lane and street,
And I'm coming (hic!) and I'm coming
Old acquaintances to greet. (Tumbles.)

MRS. JUNO.—Unhappy boy! where have your arrows gone?

CUPID.—I left 'em with my wings at Simpson's pawn;
They're no good, anyhow—I had 'em clipt.

MRS. JUNO.—Poor child; let him of all these duds be stript,
And in a shower bath be straightway dipt.
(He is carried off.)

Ah! dear me! bless us! this is a surprise.

Enter VENUS, dressed as one of the demi-monde, with a crowd of fashionable followers in chains, concealed in garlands of roses.

Venus, my dear—can we believe our eyes?

VENUS.—O, yes, it's me. Don't I look bang-up, hey?

JUPE.—But who are all these muffs you've with you, say?

VENUS.—A few soft Lushingtons, brought from afar,
And thus have chained to my triumphal car.
With but a twinkle of my beaming eye,
Trust me, I made their crispy bank notes fly!

Enter ÆOLUS, god of the winds, with carpet bag and umbrella.

Æ.—How' do! Just now the earth with heat's aglow,
So by the fast train I've come up to blow.

Enter VULCAN, with implements

VUL.—Old Kelso's after me, to stop my forgin',
And so in haste I've come up here accordin'.

Others present themselves, when enter the Three Graces, ushering in LYDIA THOMPSON, PAULINE MARKHAM and ROSE HERSEE, who all curtsey. A general sensation, with murmurs of "How beautiful!" "what symmetry!" "what grace!" etc.

APOLLO (sings—Air, "Coal Black Rose").—Lubly Thompson, Markham come,
Don't you hear de banjo, tum, tum, tum;
O Rose, bright eyed Rose!
I wish may be dam if I don't lub Rose!

JUPITER receives return visits from earth; a ballet ensues, in which the LAURIS take part, when there is a tumult without and Cerberus comes stumbling in affrighted.

JUPE.—What means this panic? Speak!

CERB.—O, lord, O lord!
The last train up has brought in such a horde
Of roughs and carpet baggers—left by a man
Called Horace Greeley, who is in the van
From your own throne to drive you.

JUPE.—Give me a sabre, Dan!
I've left my bolts behind me. By these skies,
I think it's only Beelzebub in disguise!
If this be so, I'm for him—d— his eyes.

Music—a cloud opens and reveals the PHILOSOPHER, with a host in procession and that kat!

Troops of JUPES, led by GENERAL MARS, march out to meet them—marches, countermarches—curtain descends on a vigorous fight.

OPERA IN AUSTRALIA.

Some of the Experiences of a Manager at the Antipodes.

A glimpse of Mr. Hussey's experience in operatic management in the Australian bush is given in the following amusing extract:—I have played in places that I never before heard of, and could not find save by carefully consulting the map; but I found wherever I went that they had heard of me. When I arrived in Greenfield I made up my mind to return to Victoria, and we had to drive 130 miles to the now famous Wagga Wagga, without playing on the road. There were no hotels, and some nights we had to camp out; at others we stayed at some of the large stations. This last mode of resting was when we happened to arrive in the neighborhood of a station before it was dark. We found all this "roughing it" exceedingly pleasant, and we enjoyed perfect health. At the stations they were exceedingly kind to us and gave us the opportunity of a little kangaroo and emu hunting. Of kangaroos we saw literally thousands. In the course of our journeyings in this region some amusing scenes happened in connection with our performances. It is the fashion in this part of the world for men, women and children to take their pet dogs to an entertainment, so that sometimes the dogs appear to be the most numerous portion of the audience. We have, in consequence, become quite used to the interruptions of dog fights, of which there will be probably half a dozen in the course of an evening. Though accustomed to them, however, I cannot say we enjoy them, but the audience always takes the most lively interest in them. I distinctly refused, one evening, to admit a lady who came to the door with an enormous mastiff, for I saw mischief to the smaller canine visitors, but she indignantly replied that if her dog did not go in she would not, and her refusal was applauded by the bystanders; so in they both went, and since then "the dogs have had their day," or, rather, night. At one place, while Mrs. Hussey was singing "Put me in my little bed" to a crowded house, a large centipede was discovered wriggling on a lady's dress. In ten seconds the whole audience was demoralized in doing execution upon the reptile. Order was hardly restored when there was a cry of "snake," and every one jumped on the benches. Sure enough there was a large black snake under the pianist's chair. This intruder was also dispatched, and again tranquility reigned. Then there was a more than usually boisterous dog fight. This, of course, was only an ordinary occurrence, but, as out of it grew a fight between the owners of the dogs, necessitating the calling of the police and the putting out of the two-legged combatants, we had rather a lively time of it. Everybody, however, said the entertainment was a great success, but whether on account of the centipede, the snake, the dogs, the pugilists, the police, or our own efforts to please, I could not quite learn.

HOW TO GET OUT OF A DIFFICULTY.—It must have been with infinite amusement that Henry Ward Beecher, during a late vacation, heard one of his own published sermons delivered in an obscure village. At the close of the service he accosted the divine, and said:—"That was a fair discourse; how long did it take you to write it?"—"Oh, I tossed it off one evening when I had leisure," was the reply. "Indeed," said Mr. Beecher; "it took me much longer than that to think out the very framework of the sermon." "Are you Henry Ward Beecher?" asked the reply. "Well, then," said the unabashed preacher, "all that I have to say is, that I ain't ashamed to preach one of your sermons anywhere."

OH! SHO!!

(In the "Derned" Popular "Sho, Thar!" "Eh, What?" Style.)

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY "QUENCHER."

[NOTE.—The reader will please become affected at the proper places.]

What's that? Eh, what? Do tell! Oh, no,
Flummixed! Died! My pard, oh sho!
Surprised? Wall, yas, I reckon so.
Oh, Lor! in fact, I'll say, oh, sho!

That Joe! Those Joe! Thess Joe! Oh, Joe!
Sick ways! Sick grit! Sick a Joe! Oh, sho!
Eh, which? A muss? And Joe got stuck?
Law's sakes! Oh, lor! The blamedest luck!

Derned bad—for Joe! Feel rough! I swow!
Would kinder like to rar and row.

Poor Joe! Cove in! Bust up! Sneaked out!
Look h'ar! Them's tears, on this yer snout!

Wall thar! I'm derned! I'm stumped a bit,
Sho, thar! Guess I'll git up and git!
Eh, what? Which, eh? Say that agin.
Wall, mought as well, sho, thar! Some gin!

Refrain ad libitum.

Oh, lor! Sho, thar! I'm derned! Oh, sho!
Eh, what? Oh, yas! Oh, sho! Sho! Sho, etc.

HOW JERRY BENSON MET HIS FATE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BY FRANK C. FILLEY.

There are many in New York city who will remember the Old Tree House, that formerly stood in the Bowery near Bayard street, kept in later years by John Carlin. This building was standing during the Revolution, and was somewhat famous from the fact of Charlotte Temple having died in one of the upper rooms. This well known house was a great resort in later days for all the old sports, and the circus fraternity made it a sort of rendezvous during the winter season. Johnny Green, "Eg" Home, Dr. Bassett, Joe Pentland, the famous clown, Jim June, the champion rounce player, and others of that ilk, were often to be seen in that little bar-room, with its well-worn floor, low ceiling, and old fashioned bar. One cold winter's night, in the year 1852, a crowd of roy stiring spirits were sitting around the big stove, roasting oysters on the coals, and indulging in sundry hot liquids. The wind howled and shrieked about the windows and doors, making the warm, comfortable little room seem doubly cheerful from the contrast out of doors. Jack Ray had sung the "drunkeen Sawn" as he only could sing it; Jim June had given them his only song, "The Little White Bull," and a lull had come. Seated among the party was a tall, dark-complexioned man, a native of Kentucky, named Lafayette Kennedy, or, as he was more commonly called, Lafe Kennedy. His face was seamed by a large scar that extended from his left ear nearly to his nose, the evidence of a fearful cut.

"Come, Lafe," said Charles Marks, the dispenser of fluids, "tell us about the little unpleasantness you had; how you got that mark, and how poor Jerry Benson met his fate."

"Well, Charley," said Lafe, "I thought that yarn was played, I have told it so often; but to tell the truth, I was just thinking of it as you spoke, and if the boys would like to hear it, and you will set 'em up, I will spin it."

The drinks were soon forthcoming, and after they had been dispos

SUTDAN, Freeport, Ill.—1. A horse making a dead heat and not being subsequently distanced, is better in the race than a horse that did not win or make a dead heat. 2. A horse that wins second place twice in a race of mile heats, three in five, and third in the final heat (the race being won in three heats), wins the second money. The position of the horses in the final heat does not govern that of second and third money, but that of their relative positions in all the heats do. 3. Rules of Trotting, price 25c.

READER, Dover.—1. Bell's Life gives Princess' time in the dead heat of the Connemara stakes 4 min. 9 sec.; deciding heat 4 min. 15 sec. 2. English authorities differ in opinion as to which was the best horse that ever was produced in that country, some maintaining that Plenipotentiary was entitled to the honor; others that Middleton; before Hyllus, Flying Dutchman; while Gladiateur, West Australian, Blair Athol, Alice Hawthorn and Don John, all have their supporters.

G. J. E., South Meriden.—Gladiateur was reported in one of the leading London sporting journals to have run the 2,000 Guinea Course in 1 39, but the same journal subsequently declared that this time was erroneous. There being no official racing time taken on the English turf, we believe can be placed to that reported in the papers, which almost invariably differ from each other.

REGULAR SUBSCRIBER, Baltimore, Md.—The letters referred to are abbreviations of directions for stage business. L. U. E. means Exit upper entrance; L. 2d E., means the second entrance on the left hand side of the stage, and R. H., right hand. The musical direction in Haydn's "Creations," No. 60, Largo, means set the metronome—an instrument that correctly marks time—at 60. Largo, means slow.

J. B. F.—In the original cast of "Divorce," first produced at the Ninth Avenue Theatre, in 1871, Miss Fanny Davenport acted Lu Ten Eyck, and Miss Clara Morris, Fanny Ten Eyck. During a portion of the month of March, 1872, Miss Clara Morris was absent from that theatre, and during that time Miss Fanny Davenport played Fanny Ten Eyck and Miss Kate Newton impersonated Lu Ten Eyck.

G. N. S., Reading, Pa.—"Rip Van Winkle" was first acted in New York at the old Park Theatre on April 22d, 1830, the late Mr. J. H. Hackett the title role. The name of the author of the piece not published. Mr. Hackett for many years monopolized this character. Joe Jefferson had a copy of the same version. Dion Boucicault re-wrote portions of it and presented it to the stage.

KENTUCKY, New Orleans.—1. B can certainly order the dealer to take up the trump card, even if he, B, does not hold a single trump. 2. B can make diamonds the trumps, even if he does not hold one of that suit. Walker on Cribbage, and Cavendish on Whist, are standard authorities.

F. HULL.—A person born in Mexico would not be a native American, according to the general acceptation of the term in the United States, before that of claiming to make a native of, while in rendering he would be an European if born in any part of Europe, or an Asiatic if in Asia.

E. H. G., New Orleans, La.—So much depends upon the demand for new plays, the reputation of the author, etc., that it would be impossible to give you any idea of the value of the plays you describe. A private bargain is generally made between the author, manager, or actor.

NOVICE, Franklin, Tenn.—1. Licenses for shows differ in various States. A gift show requires no more licenses than any ball show, but the prices may be higher. 2. When a combination comprises a large number of people, you can generally get a reduction of railroad fares. 3. There is no such work published.

ATHLETIC VS. BOSTON.—In reply to several queries in regard to the disposition of bets on the prize money tourney, we have simply to state that all bets are off, which were made on the subject of winning the first prize, as the two clubs shared the money alleged to be given, neither winning or losing the first prize.

AN ENGLISH PRO.—Sabrina in this country hitherto so much in accordance with the demand for actors, their reputation, the location of the theatres and the pieces to be played, that there is not now, as formerly, any standard to judge what is a fair average salary for a particular line of business. It is now purely a matter of private contract between manager and artist.

W. G. R., Albany.—We think $25 for a game ben of the Derby Brain by no means an exorbitant price. Breeders will not be tempted to sell a favorite hen at any price, and $100 has been paid for a choice game hen.

C. E. F., Boston.—As B was present when the throwing off took place, and made no objection to C having the responsibility in case he, C, lost, he must look to the latter for the money he won of A.

R. B., Pittsburgh, Pa.—Messrs. R. W. Cameron & Co., 23 South William street, N. Y., have clipper ships for Australia and New Zealand regularly. Also W. H. Webb, 84 Exchange place, N. Y., have a line of steamers running there.

G. L. S.—Nothing official has as yet been promulgated in regard to the composition of professional nines for 1873. When it is we will give the news. There will not be more than five professional clubs in the arena, if as many.

J. H.—You cannot throw raffles with three throws, for then it becomes a game of the highest number of points. In the proper game of raffles, three deuces beat 17, as does, also, three aces, or any other triplets.

TOM GREEN, Carbon, W. T.—Your assumed, or rather given name, stands good, without any legal procedure, although it is better to have both written on the marriage certificate, in case property should be bequeathed you, etc.

JONAH BLACKSNORE.—1. The president of the United States is elected by the Electoral College, composed of electors from each state, varying in number according to population, as apportioned by the census. 2. Lotta is another man bearing the same name.

W. R.—Lotta made her first appearance in this city at Niblo's saloon, June 1st, 1884, in "Jenny Lind." She acted in "Fire Fly" at the Lyceum Theatre, 14 Wallack's Theatre, in "Under the Gaslight" has been performed at the Olympic Theatre.

HOUSE DISEASE.—1. Contortionists never use oil of any kind to render their limbs supple. Their feats are accomplished by perseverance and practice. 2. Clowns use French prepared chalk to whiten their faces.

SIMON, Weedsport.—The fastest recorded railroad time in this country is fourteen miles and a half in fifteen minutes by locomotive Hamilton Hayes, with six cars attached, on the New York Central road, in 1858.

GEORGE, West Philadelphia.—1. Yes; among the number John McDevitt, of Lancaster, Pa., and Harry H. Hall, of Lynn, Mass. 2. Hawley, George Slater and Billy Carroll. 3. Not that we are aware of.

W. H. C., Canton, O.—You would find it somewhat difficult to get an engagement. Circus managers are not apt to engage novices. If you could see one of them in person and show what you could do you might possibly effect an engagement.

FIREMAN.—The presidential election is held in all the states on Nov. 5th, except Louisiana and Texas, in the former it is held on Nov. 4th, and in the latter state it runs through four days, from the 5th to the 8th, inclusive.

SANDY, Sacramento.—The trotting horse Tacony never trotted trial time within the hour. The only horses that have accomplished this feat are Trustee, Lady Fulton, John Stewart, Captain McGowan and Mattie Howard.

JOCKEY.—Neither Ecipse nor any other horse ever ran a mile in 58 sec. The popularly received opinion to that effect is an erroneous one.

J. N. B., Madison Court House, Va.—Harry Bassett and Longfellow never ran together in the year 1871. Have sent copy of the pamphlet desired.

G. E. T., Whitinsville, Mass.—"Ned" Kendall is traveling with G. L. Fox's "Humpty Dumpty" troupe as the business manager. Watch our dramatic summary for their whereabouts.

HEW S., Troy.—The bet stands, notwithstanding the withdrawal of one of Z's party. 2. A player cannot go blind at poker after the cards have been raised. 3. No; it is a mere matter of fancy.

G. L., Buffalo, N. Y.—We believe that the Agincourt was built and launched on the Thames, but we have no authentic data to answer from.

CRAVEN AND FIRE, Baltimore.—The National Chronicle has been dead for two years, and the copies of the book you ask for are difficult to be had, being out of print.

MCV., Boston, Mass.—We do not know that he did, and can't see why he should have done so, as he was not cheated out of the stakes, which were drawn.

J. M., Plymouth, Pa.—If both men agreed to the amendment to the bet which you mention, the stakes should be drawn; if they did not, the man who bet upon Chambers wins.

JERRY H., Chicago.—Your letter is short enough, but we may find room for it at some future time. We thank you for the contribution.

WALDOR H. PHILLIPS.—The last sent will probably be used in our next. Upon a re-reading of the others we do not find them to be up to your standard.

G. H. W., Washington, D. C.—Bill Poole was shot between 12 o'clock, midnight, and 1 o'clock A. M., on Feb. 25th, 1855, and died on March 8th.

ROMULUS.—1. We are without any record of the time made by the vessels mentioned. 2. The steamer South America ran 26 miles in an hour on the Hudson river.

M. T. C.—1. No club nines have been officially engaged as yet. When they are we shall publish the facts. 2. No. 3. About equal.

J. F.—Four aces beat a straight flush, unless a special agreement to the contrary has been made before commencing to play. Your hand therefore wins.

FRANKS, Worcester, Mass.—The Worcester Agricultural Society, not being a member of the National Association, has no power to expel or suspend a driver from the National Association's tracks.

I. AND B., Pekin, Ills.—In the billiard match between John McDevitt and Joseph Dion, the former won by 1,089 points; making a run of 1,458 points.

THEM MUCHLY.—1. Croton water is not pumped into New York; it has a natural flow through an aqueduct from a river on higher ground. 2. Can't tell—have not the details. 3. All sold.

SAM, Saco, Me.—A wins, as he was ready to continue, while his opponent could not. He must not be made to suffer through B's misfortune.

ANTHONY E., Brooklyn.—A deserter from the British army is liable to be arrested upon his return to England, even though he had in the interim become a citizen of the United States.

D. H., Cincinnati, O.—He could be elected and not actually president under such circumstances, as he be could not be actual president until inaugurated.

D. W. S., Columbus, O.—A portion of the Vienna lady orchestra are performing at the Atlantic Garden, adjoining the Bowery Theatre, in this city.

CHAS. W. DYER, Boston, Mass.—1. Heenan. 2. About equal, Heenan possessing what little superiority there may have been. 3. Mace. 4. Coburn.

CONSTANT READER.—Mr. Ten Broeck won both the Goodwood cup and Goodwood stakes with an American horse; Starke winning the former in 1851, and Ten Broeck the latter in 1852.

JACK, Detroit.—As the person referred to has not made public his political sympathies with either candidate, we cannot tell which he will support.

MCMARTIN.—Hartranft's majority for governor in the October election in Pennsylvania was 34,308; judge supreme court, 39,468; both republican.

J. F., East Tenth st.—It was your opponent's own look out to see there was nothing in the box except the dice. He is not entitled to another throw.

H. R., Moberly, Ind.—Dexter never trotted, or attempted to trot, 9 miles within the hour.

J. F. H., Cooperstown, N. Y.—There cannot be two lone hands at euchre.

H. G., Phila.—You had better apply to the executors of the deceased gentleman for the information desired.

WILD OATS, Boston.—You score the Jack of hearts the moment it is turned, notwithstanding that suit had been previously run.

J. M. R., Chandler, in a steeple chase at Warwick, England, cleared 20 feet.

A. F. K., Providence, R. I.—We would recommend you to apply to Senator O'Brien himself for the information.

DEER, Fairview, Pa.—Any gunsmith will give you the information.

ST. PAUL.—It was not a proper shot, it should have been played from within the string; yet it is not classed among the fouls.

TWO TOWSERS, FARMER AND W. E. ANDREWS.—See reply to Athletic vs. Boston.

O. W. A., Louisville, Ky.—We believe that the story was published by us, under a different title, five or six years ago.

REMUS, Galveston, TEXAS.—The population of Toronto, Canada, is 49,000.

MOSE, JONES, Attica, Ind.—The time of the steamer Alida is the fastest from New York to Albany—8 hours and 21 minutes.

T. E. S., Leavenworth, KAN.—J. F. Wild, as Tom Sayers and Tom King were never opponents.

SACOVILLE.—Tom Hyer and Yankee Sullivan fought in February, 1849.

WATER MEYER, Warwick.—We are not aware that any such offer has been made.

X. Y.—If Mr. Greeley gets a majority of 35,000 in this city, then A wins, regardless of the electoral votes.

H. A. J., Washington, D. C.—Thank you; but we have a similar correspondent in your city.

N. E. S., Philadelphia.—A very interesting memento; it will appear next week.

DAUM & Co., Cincinnati, O.—We think that a letter addressed to the lady at Boston, Mass., post office will reach her.

ANGUS, New Orleans.—Sorry, but had the score of the game in print when yours was received.

W., Syracuse, N. Y.—If you choose to send brief items, you can do so.

J. E., Indianapolis, Ind.—Write to T. Allston Brown, 730 Broadway, N. Y.

X. Y., Baltimore.—1. Yes, they count. 2. We have no record thereof.

F. C. B., Manchester, N. H.—The fault is with the post office department. The paper is mailed regularly on Tuesday A. M.

T. S., Fort Mackinac, Mich.—Send to T. Allston Brown, 718 Broadway, for his "History of the American Stage."

WHITE CHARLES.—It was mislaid; we will endeavor to find it, and give it early insertion.

JACK GORLDING, Litchfield, Ill.—We don't know the precise address of either.

W. H. C., Canton, O.—1. No; that course was considerably less than five miles in length. 2. Odds can be obtained both ways.

SOLOMON, Indianapolis, Ind.—1. The letter is still in this office. 2. We advertise letters but once only.

C. D. L., Andover, Ill.—We never give the private address of professional ladies; read the CLIPPER.

L. W.—Both are right and both are wrong, for sometimes we take Hoyle as an authority to answer by and sometimes we do not.

DAVE I.—Your friend cannot honorably withdraw his bet unless with your consent.

F. & F., Kingston, Canada.—The advertisement in a space of twelve lines will cost $46.80 for six months, cash in advance.

SPORTSMAN.—You cannot have three throws at raffles in throwing dice, for it then becomes a game of spots.

K. E. H., Rowe.—Do you mean the best work on training trotting horses, or the best authority on their diseases?

READER, Toledo.—Herzog's fastest running time for one mile was 1:43¾.

W. W. J., East Hampton, MASS.—We do not know any parties who deal in such literature.

E. J. H., Williamsburgh, N. Y.—We published the poem about three years ago, but the papers containing it are all out of print.

A DELEGATE.—There will be no amateur convention this year. The rules as they are suffice for all practical purposes.

CHAMPIONSHIP, Brooklyn.—Until officially declared by the championship committee no club can be champions.

P. D., Pittsburgh.—1. In cutting for deal at seven up, high is entitled to it. 2. The ace is low.

C. J.—In cutting for deal at euchre, the Jack, or bower, is the best card, and entitled to the deal.

B. R.—Accepted. Cannot be reserved after publication; better have it copyrighted.

N. H. W., Chicago.—Thank you; it shall have early attention.

LARY, Boston.—We cannot afford the space for reprint matter.

GLOBE THEATRE, Troy, N. Y.—J. K. Emmet is his proper name.

HENRY, Waynesburg.—We do not know anything of the firm.

SENIOR HALLOA, Washington.—Young's nine is the best by far.

C. H. F., Boston, Mass.—Many thanks for renewed favors.

L. I., Des Moines, Iowa.—Thanks, but we do not require it.

RINGMASTER.—We cannot decipher your handwriting.

D. HERCULES.—Seven dollars and twenty-five cents.

I. O. U.—1. It was not played. Bets are off. 2. No.

C. F. N., Pittsburgh, Pa.—We cannot inform you.

A RETIRED PROFESSIONAL.—Accepted, with thanks.

W. J. E., Yannton, Mass.—Respectfully declined.

E. AND S., Brooklyn.—See answer to J. D. S.

BASE, Lee, MASS.—The run does not count.

E. A.—No. The Boston backer wins.

KARL KROSS, Brooklyn.—In the 13th.

A. B., Cincinnati, O.—All right.

J. F. B.—H wins.

CAPTIOUS CRITICS.

The honest and un-hypercritical person, who goes to the theatre for the purpose of enjoying himself, will—if he read the captious strictures of some of the critical gentry, in regard to the various shortcomings of the drama and its representatives—doubtless be inclined to consider it a fortunate thing not to be possessed of too much knowledge in regard to dramatic proprieties. For certainly it must be an uncomfortable state of things when one gets to know so very much, and to be so keenly alive to all the requisites which go to produce a perfect dramatic representation, as to be continually annoyed and shocked by supposed trifling irregularities, not observable to the general eye, but easily distinguished, and but too plain to that mysterious article—the "trained and cultivated eye." In such a case one would consider a little knowledge to be an uncomfortable—if not "dangerous thing." And an unenviable state of feeling it must be when a man gets to be so clever as to be continually growling and worrying, spying out and magnifying, and even inventing trifling irregularities, while others—not possessed of such a load of classical lore—are calmly enjoying themselves, totally unaware of their lamentable ignorance, which allows them to smile and praise while the dramatic proprieties are being openly, palpably and grossly violated.

Now, if there were any authority whatever for growling as some of these folks do, or if there were any practical sense in their complaints, or if the drama would be in any respect improved were the defects spoken of remedied, then we might excuse their "contrary" qualities and regard them as martyrs in a small way, giving up pleasure and their peace of mind for the improvement of art; but, as the defects spoken of are generally original with, and invented by the talented "cusses" themselves—although coolly stated as palpable and important errors—and as their improvement or removal would be of such slight importance to the drama as not to warrant any trouble in the matter, why, then we may reasonably suppose that impudence and self-conceit—and not great talent or smartness—are the qualities to which may be ascribed the "heavy" style of these soreheads.

We might consider the attacks of this class to be honestly meant—even if particular to an uncomfortable degree—were they as ready and anxious to discover and spy out good qualities heretofore unnoticed, as well as the bad, and to accord praise in such cases, in the same proportion as they administered wordy punishment in others. Or were they to observe or "invent" excellencies with the same facility as they do faults, it would give things an honest and well-meant approval, which would go far to assure us of the candor of their endeavors; but as they do not do this, and as they are not as ready or willing to praise as they are eager to blame, then we may be tempted to imagine that the acerbity of their style is prompted by something else besides the desire of being critically honest. Well, we suppose that their great objection to praising is, that it doesn't speak as well for their erudition as does censure, the one expressing a foolish state of receiving pleasure without a proper investigation, while the other betrays a scholarly mind yearning after nothing short of perfection. The best evidence of the utter frivolousness and want of bottom in this sort of continual "picking" is the fact that the different members of this "critical" party but seldom agree in regard to the particular demerits of the subject under consideration, each one "picking" away with eager haste, and setting up his pet "mistakes," confidently proclaiming them as the original bona fide ones, the rectifying of which is positively necessary to restore to the critical head its mental equilibrium. We don't wish to discourage the habit of examining into anything with an eye to improvement, for it shows the proper spirit. Especially is this the case in the drama, where the need of good, careful criticism is greatly felt. But we do certainly object to this conceited, egotistical style of slashing, abusing, and magnifying comparatively trifling errors by some of the would-be critics of the present day.

WE WRITE THIS on the eve of a presidential election, and although in this city we hold our state and local election at the same time, a more quiet "day before the battle of the ballots" we never witnessed. There is some little stir in the mayoralty contest, but beyond this a stranger might imagine that we had all "gone a fishing." Jimmy O'Brien's friends believe that he will "go in a hootin'," and Havemeyer's adherents look upon both O'Brien and Lawrence as "dead cocks in the pit." If we wanted to be mayor, and had our choice of candidates, we should consider our chances best if Havemeyer was our name, for it looks to a man up a tree like as if O'Brien and Lawrence were splitting the democratic log just enough to let Havemeyer roll in between the divided parts; but "don't gamble" on what we say. For governor, it is probable that the Grant "tidal wave" may carry Dix safely into port; but be cautious in "making your little game," for it is uncertain what a day may bring forth.

WE ARE ASHAMED of the male sex of New York city, who have always enjoyed a high reputation for gallantry. Had they possessed a spark of the politeness which has heretofore been accorded them, they had ample opportunity to manifest it last week, when street car navigation was impeded by the horse disease. Our men have frequently made asses of themselves when some foreign celebrity has landed on our shores, yet they showed no disposition to make horses of themselves, and draw the fair sex along in our passenger cars, when it became not merely a question of gallantry, but of duty as well. We are ashamed of ourselves.

CAUTION.—The epizooty, since its appearance in this city, has killed a large number of horses; and it is a fact worthy of notice that, with the decease of these animals, sausages have flooded the market. Now it is just possible that the first lamentable event may have no direct bearing upon the latter; but to our readers we would suggest extreme caution in the purchase and consumption of sausages. If you have no confidence in the seller, you had better abstain from the use of provisions, one of the chief ingredients of which is the epizooty horse meat.

THE MOVAMENSING HOSE COMPANY'S "Square Association," of Philadelphia, whose fame as firemen spreads far and wide, intend enjoying their grand annual ball at Musical Fund Hall on Monday evening, Nov. 11th. That it will be an enjoyable event for the lads and their lassies cannot be questioned, and invitations to be there are highly appreciated.

A RESTAURANT on Broadway exhibits at its door what its proprietors call a hundred pound squash. It is probably some large pumpkin, as we have noticed in several first class restaurants that the proprietors make squash out of pumpkin, and get angry if their customers call it by its proper name.

THE EQUINE DISTEMPER having curtailed the usefulness of that tried and trusty animal, the horse, the odd spectacle of an ox drawing a load of merchandise was presented to our notice last week. Can this be properly called the autumn equine-ox?

WHERE IGNORANCE IS BLISS, ETC.—We are given to understand that the malicious managers of the Georgia State Fair offer a premium for the ugliest editor. Now, if those insane managers had offered a prize for the handsomest editor, then competition would be lively, and the success of the fair assured. As it is, there are no candidates.

AT A LATE BABY SHOW in Duluth, one of the editors of that progressive town "took the first prize," but the report does not mention whether it was a case of larceny, or the prize was awarded to his infantile progeny. Why not make the details a little more clear?

HINT TO MANAGERS.—Considering the universal interest in the noble horse just now, and the interference with theatrical business in consequence of the epizootic impediment to travel, would it not be well for some enterprising manager to revive and reproduce "The Bronze Horse?" Surely that would draw.

SMOKING.—A man in Pennsylvania, who has suffered for a long time with chronic rheumatism, was cured by a stroke of lightning from a thunder cloud a few days ago. How contrary things act sometimes. Now, we know a man who became paralyzed the other day just by a stroke of poker in the hands of his wife.

IMPATIENT TRAVELERS, who used to curse and swear at car conductors and drivers for not getting along faster, are now satisfied if they can find conveyance at all. "It's a horse of another color," now.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

 MRS. Victoria Woodhull and Miss Tennie C. Claflin, the female brokers and free-lovelers, were arrested on Nov. 2d, upon a charge of sending obscene matter through the U. S. mails, said publication consisting of a journal called Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly, which has been devoted to the dissemination of their doctrines of free-love, and the latest number of which contained an article headed "The Beecher-Tilton Scandal Case," in which Rev. H. W. Beecher, Mr. Theodore Tilton and other gentlemen were slandered, it is said, in an outrageous manner. The women were taken before Commissioner Osborn, for examination, and held to bail in $10,000 each, and as no one came forward to give bonds, in $8,000 each, for their appearance, they were committed to Ludlow street jail. After their incarceration, George Francis Train offered to become their bondsman, but the latter, having learned that several other orders of arrest had been issued against them for libel. On the same day Col. Blood, the reputed husband of Vic., and Wm. A. Smith, were taken into custody upon the affidavit of Mr. L. W. Challis, that the gentlemen libelled in the article mentioned, but Mr. Smith was promptly bailed out. The arrests created much excitement. The case came before Commissioner Osborn at 1 o'clock P. M. on 14th inst., but as indictments had been found against the defendants by the grand jury, and bench warrants issued, he was relieved of the necessity of making an examination. The warrants were then served upon the defendants, the bail remaining fixed in the sum of $5,000 each.

 A conflict arose last week between the upper and lower houses of the German Diet. The lower house passed a country reform bill, providing self-government for the rural districts, which the aristocratic upper house, in the upper house. On Oct. 28th the emperor commanded the president of the latter body to endorse the measure, but it was rejected by a vote of 165 to 18, and that, too, in the face of a threat from the minister of the interior that, in case of its defeat, the government would dissolve the diet. The session was accordingly closed at 2 o'clock P. M. on Nov. 1st, when a decree was read dissolving the body and ordering an election for a new diet, which is called to meet on Nov. 12th. Count Von Eulenberg, minister of the interior, has tendered his resignation, which the emperor refuses to accept.

[illegible]—"Babil and Bijou" continued to attract large audiences at Covent Garden.....Miss. Celeste's engagement at the Adelphi was announced to terminate on Nov. 1st, and on the 2d an entirely original drama in four acts, by Henry J. Byron, is to be produced.....At the Alhambra, "Le Roi Carotte" had its first representation.....At the Surrey on Oct. 28th, Charles H. Fish's representation.....At the Surrey on Oct. 28th, Mr. F. H. Allen, a well-known American actor, made his first appearance on the London stage in Claude Melnotte in "The Lady of Lyons." The Court Circular speaks of him as follows:—"Mr. Allen was most meritorious in the character which he assumed, and, while avoiding the melo-dramatic treat, he was on a most powerful interpreter of Lord Lytton's hero, and we know, although often attempted, Claude is no easy part to play. The audience was very enthusiastic and repeated calls before the curtain testified to the high popularity achieved by the really able representation of the part." He will play a star engagement there of two or three weeks, commencing Nov. 2d.....The Opera Comique under the management of R. F. Hingston was to have been opened for the season on Oct. 31st, with a new comedy by Hugh Cogshead, Esq., entitled "A Dream of Love" and the opera bouffe, "LOEN Green" in English.....When "Money" shall be withdrawn at the Prince of Wales, "Dan and Wife" will succeed.....John S. Clarke was announced to inaugurate his season at the Charlestown Theatre on Nov. 7th.....At the Standard, T. Swinbourne commenced an engagement on Oct. 19th, and was to act on alternate nights with Mr. and Mrs. Bandmann.....Miss Rosalie Wilmore had arrived in London.....No other changes had occurred at the other theatres.

MR. JAMES HENRY HOWARD, a well known actor, died in London, Eng., Oct. 11th, aged sixty-two. He was a grandson of Mr. Hughes, formerly a large shareholder and manager of Sadlers Wells theatre, and son of Mr. Henry Hughes, who was manager and part proprietor of the Western Circuit, including the towns of Exeter, Weymouth, Dartmouth, Guernsey and Devonport. He was born in the theatre-house of the last-named town, where he played as a child to Edmund Kean and other stars. His father, regarding the acting-management of the circuit to his brother-in-law and co-partner, Mr. John Bennett, settled in London, and was appointed to the management of Vauxhall Garden, by the proprietors, Messrs. Bish, Gye and Hughes (his brother), where the deceased practised scene-painting under Mr. Thorn and Mr. W. Cooke. On the resumption of the directorship of the western theatres by Mr. Hughes, sen., he was installed for a year into the office of manager and scene-painter when he returned to Vauxhall; but having "smelt the lamps" became ambitious of entering upon the theatrical profession. He, therefore, accepted a situation with his father's tenant, Mr. Harvey, of Weymouth, with whom he remained nearly two years, until a more lucrative offer induced him to join Mr. Samuel Fenley, at Newcastle. At the end of the season he was engaged by Edmund Kean for Richmond, and subsequently became the manager of his father's theatres. His first appearance in London was at the Pavilion, under the management of Mr. Gladstone, in 1837, and he afterwards went to the Surrey in 1842, where he remained as leading actor for five consecutive years, under the management of Mrs. Davidge; Messrs. Dale, W. Smith, E. F. Saville, J. Johnson, Mrs. Henry Vining, Mrs. R. Honner and Miss Martin being members of the company. He played originally in a drama by E. Stirling (his father) called "The Mountain's Son" and in Mr. E. L. Blanchard's drama entitled "Faith, Hope and Charity." He transferred his services to the Princess's in 1847, appearing in his principal character of the drama "Clarissa Harlowe," and that night to Adolphus in 1848, appearing as Luke Fielding in "The Willow Copse." Unfortunately he was obliged to leave the profession through ill health. Miss Hughes (Mrs. Gaston Murray) is his daughter. The deceased leaves a large family who are retired from the profession. Mr. Hughes was nearly twenty years on the Royal General Theatrical Fund. He was buried at Nunhead Cemetery on Thursday, the 17th inst.

MRS. HENRY M. HEALY, who had been connected with the theatrical profession over forty-five years, died in Liverpool, Eng., Oct. 7th, after an illness of twenty-six weeks. He leaves an only son, T. A. Healy, in the profession.

MLLE. RAVALLI has made her début at the Grand Opera House, Paris, France, in the revived ballet, "La Source."

IN THE FORTHCOMING REVIVAL at the Court Theatre, London, Eng., of Dryden's "Amphitryon," Mr. Litton will appear as Phædra; Miss Ada Dyas, Alcmena; Mrs. Stephens, Bromia; Mr. Vesin, Jupiter; Mr. Righton, Sosia; Mr. Fisher, Amphitryon, and Mr. Steyne, Mercury. The following prologue, written by Mr. Oxenford, will be spoken by Mr. Vesin as Jupiter:—

PROLOGUE.

Ladies and gentlemen, 'tis our intent,
A play once deem'd a classic to present.
All about Jupiter, who, sway'd by love,
To court Alcmena, leaves his realm above,
And that his wooing may not fail, puts on
The form of her betrothed, Amphitryon,
Who, as Theseus, to the wars has gone.
"Betrothed," I say—not married—do not quarrel,
Lempriere says otherwise, but we are moral.
That I am Jupiter you'll bear in mind.
Else a sad puzzle in our plot you'll find.
Here, my son Mercury you'll recognize:
To aid his sire, he, too, will leave the skies;
With right good will, my enterprise he shares,
And, as you see, a servile habit wears.
He hopes, as Sosia, to prevent intrusion,
And, trusts, with me, you'll relish the confusion
That will arise, when, laid aside our terrors,
We gods produce a "Comedy of Errors."
We use the text that "glorious Dryden" taught us,
Instead of following Moliere or Plautus.
If sometimes, wishing to be Greek,
We blurt out phrases that are not antique,
Call, if you like, our comedy grotesque,
But do not, pray, mistake it for burlesque.
Pshaw! If it serves a weary hour to kill,
Bestow a laugh, and call it what you will.

MR. RICHARD LEE, the author of "Ordeal by Touch," has completed an original drama, which has been accepted by Mr. Phelps, and in which, it is anticipated, that actor will speedily appear.

"CREDIT" is the title of a comedy to which Mr. Leopold Lewis, the adapter of "The Bells," is putting the finishing touches.

Musical.

MISS VIOLETTA COLVILLE is to sing at La Scala, Milan, Italy, during the carnival season.

MR. AYNSLEY COOK will commence a season of English operas at the Standard Theatre, London, Eng., on the 4th of November. He has already engaged Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. George Perren, Mr. Nordblom, Mr. Vernon Rigby (for a limited series) and several other popular singers.

THE St. JAMES THEATRE, London, Eng., is shortly to re-open, under the management of Messrs. Mansell. The opening piece will be Offenbach's opera, "Le Pont de Soupirs," adapted into English by Mr. Henry S. Leigh. The engagements include Messrs. Rosenthal, Tilla, Shaw, Tempest, Robins, Dan. Leeson, and Mesdames Julia Hillerton, Nita de Castro, Louise Beverley and M'lle de Bonnevalle, from the Theatre Lyrique in Paris. Mr. Alfred Cellier, well known as a composer of operettas, will conduct the orchestra, and the scenery is to be contributed by Mr. Julian Hicks.

THE ST. PETERSBURG ITALIAN OPERA SEASON promises to be exciting, owing to the rivalry between Madame Adelina Patti and Madame Nilsson-Rouzaud. The fair Swede is to have the part of Valentine in Meyerbeer's "Ugonotti," and Madame Patti is not likely to allow her the monopoly of it. Whilst Madame Nilsson, to whom he remained captive until a more lucrative offer induced him to join Mr. Samuel Fenley, at Newcastle. At the end of the season he was engaged by Edmund Kean for Richmond, and subsequently became the manager of his father's theatres. His first appearance in London was at the Pavilion, under the management of Mr. Gladstone, in 1837, and he afterwards went to the Surrey in 1842, where he remained as leading actor for five consecutive years, under the management of Mrs. Davidge; Messrs. Stirling (his father) called "The Mountain's Son" and in Mr. E. L. Blanchard's drama entitled "Faith, Hope and Charity." He transferred his services to the Princess's in 1847, appearing in his principal character of the drama "Clarissa Harlowe," and that night to Adolphus in 1848, appearing as Luke Fielding in "The Willow Copse." Unfortunately he was obliged to leave the profession through ill health. Miss Hughes (Mrs. Gaston Murray) is his daughter. The deceased leaves a large family who are retired from the profession. Mr. Hughes was nearly twenty years on the Royal General Theatrical Fund. He was buried at Nunhead Cemetery on Thursday, the 17th inst.

MRS. HENRY M. HEALY, who had been connected with the theatrical profession over forty-five years, died in Liverpool, Eng., Oct. 7th, after an illness of twenty-six weeks. He leaves an only son, T. A. Healy, in the profession.

MRS. RAVALLI has made her début at the Grand Opera House, Paris, France, in the revived ballet, "La Source."

IN THE FORTHCOMING REVIVAL at the Court Theatre, London, Eng., of Dryden's "Amphitryon," Mr. Litton will appear as Phædra; Miss Ada Dyas, Alcmena; Mrs. Stephens, Bromia; Mr. Vesin, Jupiter; Mr. Righton, Sosia; Mr. Fisher, Amphitryon, and Mr. Steyne, Mercury. The following prologue, written by Mr. Oxenford, will be spoken by Mr. Vesin as Jupiter:—

PROLOGUE.

Ladies and gentlemen, 'tis our intent,
A play once deem'd a classic to present.
All about Jupiter, who, sway'd by love,
To court Alcmena, leaves his realm above,
And that his wooing may not fail, puts on
The form of her betrothed, Amphitryon,
Who, as Theseus, to the wars has gone.
"Betrothed," I say—not married—do not quarrel,
Lempriere says otherwise, but we are moral.
That I am Jupiter you'll bear in mind.
Else a sad puzzle in our plot you'll find.
Here, my son Mercury you'll recognize:
To aid his sire, he, too, will leave the skies;
With right good will, my enterprise he shares,
And, as you see, a servile habit wears.
He hopes, as Sosia, to prevent intrusion,
And, trusts, with me, you'll relish the confusion
That will arise, when, laid aside our terrors,
We gods produce a "Comedy of Errors."
We use the text that "glorious Dryden" taught us,
Instead of following Moliere or Plautus.
If sometimes, wishing to be Greek,
We blurt out phrases that are not antique,
Call, if you like, our comedy grotesque,
But do not, pray, mistake it for burlesque.
Pshaw! If it serves a weary hour to kill,
Bestow a laugh, and call it what you will.

MR. RICHARD LEE, the author of "Ordeal by Touch," has completed an original drama, which has been accepted by Mr. Phelps, and in which, it is anticipated, that actor will speedily appear.

"CREDIT" is the title of a comedy to which Mr. Leopold Lewis, the adapter of "The Bells," is putting the finishing touches.

Musical.

MISS VIOLETTA COLVILLE is to sing at La Scala, Milan, Italy, during the carnival season.

MR. AYNSLEY COOK will commence a season of English operas at the Standard Theatre, London, Eng., on the 4th of November. He has already engaged Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. George Perren, Mr. Nordblom, Mr. Vernon Rigby (for a limited series) and several other popular singers.

THE St. JAMES THEATRE, London, Eng., is shortly to re-open, under the management of Messrs. Mansell. The opening piece will be Offenbach's opera, "Le Pont de Soupirs," adapted into English by Mr. Henry S. Leigh. The engagements include Messrs. Rosenthal, Tilla, Shaw, Tempest, Robins, Dan. Leeson, and Mesdames Julia Hillerton, Nita de Castro, Louise Beverley and M'lle de Bonnevalle, from the Theatre Lyrique in Paris. Mr. Alfred Cellier, well known as a composer of operettas, will conduct the orchestra, and the scenery is to be contributed by Mr. Julian Hicks.

THE ST. PETERSBURG ITALIAN OPERA SEASON promises to be exciting, owing to the rivalry between Madame Adelina Patti and Madame Nilsson-Rouzaud. The fair Swede is to have the part of Valentine in Meyerbeer's "Ugonotti," and Madame Patti is not likely to allow her the monopoly of it. Whilst Madame Nilsson will be in St. Petersburg Madame Patti will be in Moscow; and when she has completed her engagement she will go to St. Petersburg, and Madame Nilsson will go to Moscow. The contending stars will not, therefore, be in immediate collision. In the meanwhile, national opera is not neglected in St. Petersburg, for M'lle Krasowski has successfully sung in the "Ronssalka" of Dargomyski, and a new opera by Scentis, "Jermak, the Brigand of Siberia," will be produced.

AN EXAMPLE WORTHY OF IMITATION BY OPERATIC ARTISTS.—At the Grand Opera House, Paris, France, on Oct. 14th, Mozart's "Don Juan" was announced, and the clever singer Gailhard was cast for the part of Leporello. He was suddenly taken with a violent sore throat, and the doctor on service at the theatre being consulted, emphatically declared that, if the artiste went through his role that evening, he ran the risk of ruining his voice forever. It was too late to find a substitute, and the box-book gave evidence of a sum of 7,000 francs (£280) for seats already let, while it was confidently expected that as much would be taken at the doors. The brave performer promised, nevertheless, to go on, and no damage has been done to his organ, while he has earned the right to eternal gratitude on the part of the manager.

THE TWO WELL-KNOWN and accomplished prime donne, Madame Forlani and Madame Laborde, are now giving singing lessons in Paris.

THE ITALIAN OPERA SEASON at Cairo, Egypt, was to have been commenced Nov. 1st, and will last until the end of March, 1873. M'me Parepa-Rosa is the chief prima donna, and Signor Bottesini, the double bass player, the conductor.

THE GREAT SUCCESS:
NIAGARA,
A BRILLIANT SOCIETY COMEDY,
WRITTEN BY
JOHN S. NORTON.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:

The play presented was a society drama, written expressly for Miss Morris and Mr. Norton, and is entitled "Niagara." It is rambling and without much plot, its object being to mirror the follies of rather foolish girls who go to fashionable watering places to catch husbands, and the jealousies and sore heartedness that made them. There are many intensely funny and pleasant situations, and the costumes were very elegant. The character in which most of the interest centres is Mrs. Swan, personated by Miss Clara Norris, an arch and beautiful young woman, married to an old but fond and noble-hearted husband. She is beset by a dashing, mustachioed, very handsome, who tries to steal her affections from her devoted husband. He partially succeeds, and rouses the suspicion of her pompous, who believes her with unfaithful, and grieved at heart, leaves her for a while. The parting of Mrs. Swan and her husband comes next, and there is a happy ending. The extreme heartlessness and overworkedness of Jack Murray, who is painfully smitten with a fascinating bright-eyed coquette, Miss Kate May, but who can't muster courage to make an avowal, was admirably portrayed by Mr. John Norton.

The happy era which many strong minded amazons are trying to bring about, when women with the ballot shall help sway the world, was finely hit off in the character of Mrs. Anthony, a tyrannical and scolding wife, and a member of the New York Sorosis, and her henpecked Mr. Anthony, the model husband of the future. The abject misery pictured on his wan face, worn thin and hollow under his amiable wife's dominion, when left to tend the baby, and the spiteful looks and pokes he would give it when her face was turned, together with his blundering attempts at cooking and other house work, kept the audience in continual laughter. The look of unutterable joy, too, that would overspread his face when an officer of the law came to nab the partner of his joys and sorrows for assuming man's dress, and the gleams of exultation that lighted up his visage when divorce was talked of, were perfectly irresistible.—Erie Standard.

THE NORRIS-NORTON COMBINATION.
This company made its first appearance at the Opera House last evening, in the society play entitled "Niagara," to a full house. The piece is one of real merit in its construction, being a representation of high life in the most fashionable watering places. It shows the evil effects of flirtation by married women, in the separation of Mrs. Swan from her husband, occasioned by the attentions which she allowed herself to receive from Jack Wood, a man of the world. Husband and wife are however, happily reunited in the play. Miss Clara Norris as Mrs. Swan, performed her part with great credit and becoming grace. She possesses merit as an actress, and is sure to make a name in the profession. Mr. John S. Norton as Jack Murray, the bashful lover, was a success. The play was very finely produced, the dresses being rich and costly, while the appointments could not have been surpassed.—Titusville Courier.

MARTIN OPERA HOUSE.
The Norris and Norton combination opened last night at Martin's Opera House, to an enthusiastic audience. This troupe was organized in New York by Mr. Henry Greenwall, who is well and favorably known as a southern manager, also in New York city. The comedy is interesting, full of sparkling wit and brilliant dialogue, and combines the best of Augustine Daly's style of plays than any we have ever seen. Mrs. Swan was ably portrayed by Miss Clara Norris, who proved herself an actress of culture and refinement. Mr. John Norton as Mr. Jack Murray proved himself fully equal to the role, and played the part with spirit.—Albany Argus.

The play of Niagara is one written expressly for this company, and played only by them. The thread of the plot is difficult to discover; but the play throughout is full of interesting situations. The drama is much like Divorce, Saratoga and other society plays having a great run in all the cities.

The costumes were very elegant, and many of the lady members of the company are really pretty, which, by the way, does not detract from the merits of the company or the play. The part which Mr. and Mrs. Anthony—the last a strong minded woman—take in the drama was probably the most interesting feature of the evening's entertainment. Both of these characters are extremely amusing, and kept the house in roars of laughter at each appearance.—Meadville Press.

We have had nothing so fine since the "Divorce Party" as was the society comedy "Niagara," at the Opera House last evening.—Elizabeth, N. J., Paper.

A MODEL MISSISSIPPI GAMBLER.

He Beats Four Cold Aces with Five Bullets, Stabs an Officer, Rips up his "Pard" and Slices off the Tip of a Rival's Nose.

In the good old steamboating days, the steamboats plying between New Orleans and St. Louis, and New Orleans and Cincinnati, never made a trip without carrying one or more chevalier d'industrie, who turned any trick that came in his way, from robbing a state room to wringing in a cold deck on a flat in a game of draw poker. The men were invariably well dressed and gentlemanly, and were rarely without a roll of $1,500 or $2,000. They generally traveled in pairs, as it was frequently possible for one of the brothers to render his companion valuable assistance, especially in a little game of draw, where the dealer would stock the cards, slip the cut and deal in such a manner as to give the man at his left a full hand but to furnish his partner with a larger full. The victim, if smart, would "tumble to the game and jump it" after getting outrageously beaten once or twice on almost invincible hands, but such hankings would already have made enough to pay them well for the trip. One of the most noted of the professionals was Humphrey Davis, a small, dapper and rather good looking man, of perhaps 30 years of age, who traveled almost continually on the boats, but made his home in New Orleans, where he supported a woman in luxurious style. He was not married to her, but seemed to entertain an unusual affection for her, and treated her with the greatest tenderness, although he was naturally utterly cold and unscrupulous. He weighed only 120 or 125 pounds, but his word was never disputed by his reckless companions, who knew that he would brook contradiction or interference from none, and that his hand readily fell on the hilt of a knife or the handle of a revolver. Unlike many of the others, he frequently traveled alone, and was always ready to test his skill in a game of poker with one or more strangers, but the professionals who knew him only by reputation hesitated at trying to beat him by illegitimate means, well knowing that, should the cheat be discovered, the consequences of losing not the money, is not *Davis met a party who expressed a desire to engage in a little poker, and, as he manifested no reluctance, they all adjourned to the cabin after supper, and, wheeling out a table, commenced to play. One of the party was a man standing over six feet in his stockings, and a perfect giant in muscle and strength. He had heard of Davis, but probably under estimated his shrewdness of courage, and determined to win his money by raising good hands from his lap and playing them. While he was reserving material for an invincible hand, Davis noticed it, but said nothing, and the game went on. Finally, Davis received a more than ordinarily good hand, and bet fifty dollars on it. The giant audibly changed the hand given him for the reserve on his knee, and thinking that the manœuvre had not been observed, raised the original bet one hundred dollars more. Davis saw the two hundred dollars more, and so it went until $600 or $700 were up, and Davis called. The giant threw the stolen hand on the table, and Davis quietly remarked, after looking at it, "That's a good hand." The other assented, and reached out to draw the money in, when Davis said, "Don't touch that just yet."

"Why not?" said the Goliah, "I have the best hand."

"I say, don't touch it," repeated Davis, whose eyes were beginning to gleam, although he was outwardly calm and collected.

"Yes, I will touch it, too," said the other, in a sneering way, as he swept the money toward him with his arms. He had barely placed his arms on the table when Davis reached over the table with his left hand and caught him by the hair, while with his right he drew a revolver and fired point-blank at his body. Although shot through the chest, the vitality of the man was so remarkable that the wound appeared to affect him but little, and, right hand, and, throwing [illegible] with his head back with the intention, as he afterwards said, of breaking his neck. Davis comprehended his design in an instant, and, quick as lightning, fired two shots into the giant's right shoulder, completely crippling his arm. He then sent another ball through his left arm, and, as he fell back into his chair, fired the fifth shot, the bullet passing through his antagonist's right arm near the elbow, severing one of the tendo s.

The wounded man's friends had, in the meantime, crowded back out of the way, and Davis swept his pistol, which still contained one load, around the table once or twice, and, still holding it in his right hand, called attention to the cards which the blackleg had dropped, and coolly remarked, "I told you not to touch that money, but you would do it." He then crumpled up the bills in his left hand crammed them into his pocket, and, unmolested, retired to his state-room, where he reloaded his pistol and packed his portmanteau. At the next landing he left the boat without interference, and was quickly lost to sight as he climbed up the landing and entered the woods.

It was probably owing to two reasons that the officers of the boat or passengers made no attempt to detain him. In the first place, it was evident to all of them that the sufferer had attempted to swindle or rob him, and he (Davis) being much the smaller and weaker man, they felt a sympathy for him, not unmixed with a species of admiration at his coolness and nerve. Secondly, many of them knew him by sight or reputation, and did not care to hazard their lives in an attempt to arrest him when they could gain nothing by so doing.

The wounded man was at once placed to bed by his friends, and a physician was called to attend him. Strange to say, he recovered, but for weeks after arriving in St. Louis, and becoming sufficiently convalescent to walk the streets, carried both of his arms in a sling.

Davis remained away from town some time, but finally re-appeared here, and Officer Patrick McDonough, seeing and recognizing him, arrested him, but in the attempt was stabbed and rather badly wounded in the side. The man shot, for some reason best known to himself, refused or failed to appear to prosecute him, and that case was dismissed on a nolle prosequi. How the case against him for assault with intent to kill upon Officer McDonough was disposed of, the informant did not remember, but Davis was probably released on bail, and jumped his bond.

In the fall of 1859, or spring of 1860, Davis traveled or worked for some months with one William Clifford, a professional gambler, who is said to have been openhearted and generous to a fault. His splendid appearance, fascinating manners and genial ways, made him a favorite with all who knew him, and the police or others never appealed to him to assist the destitute or otherwise unfortunate without receiving a generous contribution. Although as quick to resent a real or fancied insult as Davis, and a much more powerful man, the pair never quarreled until one night when both were, to a considerable extent, intoxicated. Some disagreement then arose between them, and Clifford struck Davis, or applied some epithet to him that aroused all the evil passions in him. He said nothing at the time, probably being unarmed, but, in walking up town that night, met an officer with whom he was acquainted, and, after narrating the quarrel, declared with an oath that, before the week was over, he would cut off Clifford's ears. The officer remarked:—You are drunk now, Davis; go home and go to bed, and you will think better of it in the morning." Davis asserted with savage earnestness that he was not drunk, and that the officer would see that he kept his word and revenged the insult. He then passed on, and the officer saw nothing more of him until two days afterward, when he was brought into the station-house, and placed on the hold-over book to await the result of a knife wound he had inflicted on Clifford.

The latter was drinking at the bar of the Astor House saloon, on Franklin avenue, when Davis, seeing him through the door, entered, and, walking up to the counter, called for a glass of beer and invited Clifford to join him. Clifford, regretting his hasty words at their last meeting, acquiesced, thinking that a mutual understanding and apology would follow. As he reached out his hand for the beer, Davis caught up his own mug and threw the contents into Clifford's face.

The latter sprang toward him to resent the insult, when Davis quickly drew a large knife and plunged it into his body, severing the intestines and causing a wound that proved fatal in two or three days. Davis was tried for the murder, but was acquitted on the ground of self-defence, as Clifford either tried to draw some weapon or strike with the beer glass before he was stabbed.

Davis is also reported to have found a New Orleans gambler altogether too intimate with his woman, and, taking him aside one evening, he informed him that the woman was the same to him as a wife would be, and that he had purchased the house and furniture for her. He concluded by saying that he did not particularly blame him (the gambler), as he did not understand the case, but he requested him to never revisit his house. The gambler promised, and Davis said he was satisfied. He, however, added that, should the gambler forfeit his word, he would find him, less amiable on a second occasion for conversation on that subject. The gambler did keep away from the house for a time, but one night, when he supposed Davis up the river, returned, by appointment, and had just seated himself for a wine supper and tete-a-tete with the object of Davis' affections, when Davis himself walked into the room, and, after knocking the interloper down with a poker, sliced off the tip of his nose with a Bowie knife, remarking that he would forever spoil his good looks. He then disarmed him, and, when he had sufficiently recovered consciousness to walk, ushered him out of the front door before the muzzle of a pistol. Davis died five or six years ago, while on a trip through the south, but whether he fell by the hand of some man equally desperate, or died of disease, was not stated.—St. Louis Democrat.

AN IMPUDENT QUESTION.—A friend says:—"Going to Cape May the other day I saw a young man leaning over the railing of the upper deck, and with considerable violence giving to the winds and the sea the contents of his stomach. Just at this juncture one of the boat officials, walking briskly by, asked, in a patronizing manner, "sick sir?" 'You don't suppose I'm doing this for fun, do you?" said the poor fellow, indignantly, as soon as he could recover his breath."

COLD CUSTARD.

A very marked character was Deacon H., who was a long time a citizen of St. Louis, until he took his departure from this mundane sphere to reap the reward of an exemplary life. A few years ago, when the temperance excitement—of which Father Matthew was the great high priest—prevailed so generally over the Eastern and Western States, no greater enthusiast lent his energies to the advancement of total abstinence principles than Deacon H. He was about fifty years of age and a bachelor, and so much abashed by the presence of ladies that, save in the way of business, he always took good care to avoid them.

He held as a point of conscience that whoever traveled in the service of the church should pay his own expenses. This singular crochet caused him to be in great demand as a delegate to synods, general assemblies, etc., of the church. These occasions were anxiously looked for by his clerks, who took advantage of his absence to relax a little from that severe propriety of deportment which was exacted f om them when he was present. In other words—their own—"They always had a good time when the old man was away."

Christmas was approaching, and the boys were delighted when they learned that "Old Stub and Twist"—as they irreverently designated him among themselves—would be off to a convention during Christmas.

In Deacon H.'s store was a long counter from end to end, the only one of the kind pertaining to any of the establishments whose clerks were in the set with the Deacon's. Although it was rather risky, in the event of a discovery, it was determined to hold the Christmas festivities where this long counter could be utilized for the purpose of setting out to advantage the "gainumptious" ngread it was resolved upon to have on this super-ordinary occasion, to come off after the store was closed at night.

Numerous guests were invited and every preparation was made to cheer the hearts and stomachs of the expected participants. No civilized person would expect, of course, that egg-nog could, by any possibility, be overlooked, for what would Christmas be without it but a mockery and delusion. Consequently, a huge bowl of this favorite beverage of the unsophisticated was prepared as the piece de resistance of the carousal.

Much solicitude was felt as to the premature return of the deacon, which would involve the necessity of selecting another scene for the festivities, but the eventful evening arrived without him or any word of him. At eleven o'clock precisely the "witties were up," the doors having been previously closed, as well as any little stray chinks that would permit the escape of a ray of light. The feast was to be a "close corporation," even from the knowledge of which all were to be excluded save the elect. At this critical moment a startling rap at the front door sent dismay into more than one stout heart, the proprietor of which would have faced a battery without flinching.

After a brief consultation, the door was opened timorously, and in walked the deacon, causing such a consternation as might have been experienced by a flock of sheep on advent of a wolf. He had traveled all day on horseback, making a forced march for the purpose of being able to spend Sunday (the next day) in his usual haunts. Very unexpectedly, he manifested no displeasure at what was going on, but on the contrary expressed himself as very glad to see something to eat, as he had partaken of no food since an early dinner that day. The prospect of having him for a guest put rather a damper on the spirits of the company, for he was nothing as "a gay and festive cuss," being as great a formalist as the Scotch covenanter who asked a blessing on being about to kiss his sweetheart. Opportunity was taken to covertly smuggle the bowl of egg-nog into the back room, and as it was the only contraband article present, serenity was restored as soon as it was out of the way. After the solemn grace upon the feast, the deacon fell to, and progressed as satisfactorily as could have been expected with such a skeleton in the closet. But the bowl of egg-nog stuck in every gizzard. It was too bad that it should remain in the back room, wasting its sweetness on the desert air.

At length one of the clerks, with a knowing wink, asked the chief if there was not a bowl of cold custard in the back room. He was answered by a deprecatory and cautionary look, but it was too late. The deacon had heard the question and answered. "If you have, the cold custard was brought in, and with much misgiving the deacon would instantly detect what it was. When there would have been a big rumpus and no mistake; for he had never tasted egg-nog in his life. Some consternation was experienced when he passed up a bowl eat it with a spoon, for while they imagined he might indulge a little, they knew he would never forgive their allowing him to get drunk on it unwittingly.

This seemed likely to be the inevitable result, however, as when he had finished his bowl he passed it up for a second deal, saying that it was the best custard he had ever tasted in his life. When he got through he sat down by the hot stove, and as he had been riding all day in the cold, and was chilled to his bones, he soon began to experience the combined influence of thawing out and stomached stimulants. "How strangely I feel," he said; "it is astonishing what a curious effect is produced by sitting at a hot fire after getting chilled through by riding all day in the cold," finishing his sentence by a very ominous yawn. Soon he would have fallen on the floor had not one of the clerks held him up, and then by a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether, a successful effort was made to get him on a lounge in the back room, where he instantly sank into a drunken stupor. It is scarcely necessary to say that the boys took advantage of the circumstance to have their high old time to their hearts' content.

The deacon failed to put in his appearance next morning at his favorite church, being too busily engaged in sleeping off the effects of cold custard, a job which he did not get through with till late in the afternoon. He never suspected the cause of his long slumber, rhuming, on inquiry, that the custard had been made in the store, he asked for the recipe for making it, as he wished his sister to make some at home, and a formula was given him selected from a cookery book, but she never was able to make any to suit him. He said it didn't taste at all like that he had eaten at the store, as it was not half as good, seeing there was no liquor in it. It was a favorite boast of his that during his entire life not a drop of spirituous liquor had ever entered his mouth, and the worthy deacon died with that delusion. And this is the true story of how a deacon got corned.

A "Chunk" of Happiness.

On a lake, any lake, so long as it is beautiful, quiet and romantic; in fact, "lakey;" at night, moonlight night, of course, in row-boat, sweet little row-boat, just a trifle frail, with sweet girl, the inevitable "sweet one" occupying boat with you, splendid eyes that "sparkle with liquid light," cunning mouth that possesses imminently kissable qualities, ripe lips and pearly teeth, golden hair which "goldens" first-rate in the silvery light, heavenly air, just a trifle melancholy and dreamy, which looks "real nice" in the hazy light. At first, talk sensibly and rationally, the splendor of the atmosphere, the "wetness" of the water, the quiet splash of the oars, the scenery, the last novel, Dunyson, etc.

Row out on "bosom of lake," "Glorious moon," "yes, real glorious," "Splendid water!" "Yes, real splendid," "Pretty mountains," "Oh! real pretty," and such like interesting talk. After a while, ship oars—"glide on gently"—"drift with the gentle tide"—all such business—in fact, enter so extensively into the "drifting" business as to let boat have its own way—two on one seat—gaze fondly at moon, then at water, then at each other; coo-num, num, num—beautiful moonlight catches "she" on end of her nose—looks so nice, oh, so! sweetest—(that's what he's a tellin' of her)—hands a getting "squozed"—weather, scenery, Tennyson, moonlight—everything completely drives from this out, and the darndest nonsense is being talked that was ever heard; no, not more nonsensical than has been said in loving, ardent whispers, ever since the world began; not more nonsensical than is being said every day and every hour, and not more nonsensical than will be said in the coming years, when the race of talkers of sweet nonsense shall have been "gathered in," and their sweet nothings shall have been bushed forever. Decidedly nonsensical, unquestionably foolish, indisputably trifling—but, positively, awfully and bewitchingly sweet!

Another Little "Chunk" of Happiness.

Whirling around in the brilliant ball-room, with the "sweetest little girl in the world" folded comfortably in your arms, you having visited the wine room just the right number of times, and not more, Thomas, and that orchestra of his, playing some of old Strauss's soul-melting, heel starting waltzes, "Harmonies of the Spheres," "Wedding Festival," "Artist Life," etc., (oh! how old Strauss*ey can* manufacture dancing music), girl glancing expressively up at you, as you sling her round loose and careless—(we meant to express a graceful way of whirling her round, but somehow the forego doesn't sound pretty)—as you whirl, it being, or supposed to be just before supper, you have the exquisite pleasure of having dim thoughts of fat turkeys, succulent meats, generous wines, etc., meander through your brain, mixing not unpleasantly with the lighter and more etherial sensations already felt therein, and—

P. S.—The above isn't at all "hard to take."

"Funny" Business.

If you would aspire to be a "real funny" man, fail not to study up the following little expressions:—

If you are asked in relation to somebody's health, grin sweetly and say:—"Guess he's got the jim-jams." This always takes well.

If in a crowded car, be always in readiness to run in the standard expressions, the good old stand-by jocularities:—"Plenty o' room," "room for one more," "move up to the stove, ladies." Don't let that last one slide, by any means.

If, in the course of conversation, the word "mean" is incidentally used, neglect not the chance to pop in the brilliant "funnity:"—"Oh, yes, mean enough for anything."

If a Frenchman happens to be around, you can get off something like this, which takes immensely:—"Parlay voo franshay de ding-dong all der whiles, mongseer?" Why this "takes," I can't explain, but it certainly does. Try it on, and you will be astonished to find how "funny" you've become.

Absurdly-defiant is the warlike sign, "Competition Defied," in such "heavy" places as tea-stores, oyster cellars, etc.

In such "big things" as steamboats, railroads, etc., "Competition" may be "Defied" with some little rationality; but when "competition" is "Defied" in the matter of oyster stews, coffee beans, milk punches and fancy soaps, it strikes the attentive and jovial observer that a deal of bold "defiance" is being wasted upon nothing.

Musical Notes.

It is safe to say that Strauss' Waltzes lose a little of their effect on the accordeon.

And that the banjo parts in the orchestral score of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony have never been found.

Also, that the jewsharp doesn't blend worth a cent with the trombone.

Likewise, that it isn't necessary to count the time out loud while playing the flute.

Each musician must keep in time with the rest, and not be ambitious and try to get through ahead of the other fellows. Keep time, the leader is the only man that beats time. (Italics for the joke so as to make it loud.)

A second violin, bass, trombone, guitar, mouth harmonicon, hand organ and tympani make a poor combination for an orchestra.

DEATH is the last person in the world to give you the cold shoulder.

A PARISIAN FAST FEMININE.

Career of a Beautiful Russian Peasant Girl —From Poverty to Affluence.

The following is published as the history of one of he female notorieties of Paris, the Countess de Pavia Arsja, one of the wealthiest women in that city. The daughter of a Russian serf, early in life she was married to a Jewneyman tailor, who, tiring of her despite her great personal beauty and wit, sold her to a Russian nobleman, who spent a fortune on her education and in traveing with her through Western Europe. His money gone, he announced to her that he must return to St. Petersburg, but she refused to go, preferring a life in Paris. Her next victim was a celebrated artist of that day, whm she accompanied to England, where he gave a series of concerts, the proceeds of which were pocked by the handsome adventuress. Not pleased at this, he musician left her in London. She then went to Pais, meeting en route a young Portuguese nobleman, Cont de Pavia Araujs, who became so fascinated with pr that he insisted upon not only transferring to her e bulk of his great wealth, but also on bestowing his nole title. With him she lived until she obtained the emainder of his money, when he was cast aside. Hitherto she had been an anonymous character; henceforth se had a title and an ancient name, both of which were lawfully hers. She had not, however, attained er great object of life, which was to grow enormouly wealthy. So she set about giving her husband a secessor. She was in a lucky vein, for the tenant of er heart was a man with a large income as a music teacr, concert giver, and manufacturer of pianos—M. Henri Herz. He was otherwise rich too—he had amassd $100,000, or may be $200,000. M. Herz went crzy with infatuation for her, and continued demented till his capital had gone and he had fallen so far behind all is engagements that there was serious peril of his creors seizing his piano manufactory. Finding the ittom of M. Herz's purse, she quitted him. He camao the United States to recoup his losses. At the age o43 she still retained great personal attraction, and was ot long in drawing into her toils a German count, a mast immense wealth, who lavished great sums of money upon her. She also turned his social relations to grat account. It was an era of monster speculation; she was a bold operator, and had accumulated before the late ar at least $2,000,000, and has made a great deal since. he owns the historical Chateau de Ponchartrain, and as her possession is stocked with game. Guards, ularly relieved, patrol the estate night and day. A vehie comes in every morning bringing to her vegetables id fruit from her garden, orchard, forcing-house and vinry, for she has all these in the highest state of excellee. The best English gardners tend them, and her stacmen are of the same nation. Dutchmen manage er dairy, and Russian women her laundry. Her cookre French, her confectioner is sent for from Vienna. Her room contains $60,000 worth of silver. Her iron afe of bank notes, which she always keeps by ir, of human events. One of her diamonds is wth $60,000. Her house, on the Avenue des Champs Elysees, is said to be the most costly in Paris. Its stairs are the purest Carrara marble, with bronze inisters expressly designed for her, and whose moris were broken after they were made. The mantels ad doors of the drawing-rooms are malachite. The paintrs who decorated her drawing-room, dining-room andlibrary are said to have received above $20,000 for ech room. There is no house in Paris like it. When war was declared she quitted Paris and took up her abode in London, while her last favorite ehe made himself so useful that he was finally mde Governor of Alsace and Lorraine. He must keep opn Pavia threatened and stormed, and finally carried by storm; and before setting out to assume his responsile position, Count Henckel von Donnersmarck, for such was his name, married her. After the close of the war they returned to Paris, and they were at once surrounded by former friends, although "society" is closed against the countess. The above facts are said to have been brought to light by the suicide of her second husband, Count de Pavia Araujs, who lived long enough to mak a statement to a priest and notary.

TO BE HUNG FOR RAPE.

At Cumberland, Md., on Oct. 26th, a colored man named Wm. Craig alias Ben, was arraigned and tried for the commission of rape, etc., on the person of an old white lady named Mrs. Lottie Dayton, aged 74, in August last, and was found guilty. On the 27th sentence was passed by Judge Pearce, and as his summing up gives sufficient details of the case, we quote it from the Cumberland

THE COURT TO THE PRISONER.

You were charged with a most heinous crime, but one, which, I regret to say, has of late become of too frequent occurrence in the land—the violation of the person of an aged and unprotected female, in the most brutal and outrageous manner. Such a crime, even if perpetrated upon a female of your own color, is by law of the highest grade known to the law; but in this case, the enormity of your offence is greatly enhanced by the fact that the object of your unlawful lust was not of your own race, but was, beside, a woman of seventy-four years of age. They have been zealously and ably defended you, and in doing so urged, as forcibly as the evidence in the case would justify, the only point which could be made in your favor, namely, your identity as the party who perpetrated the crime. After a most patient investigation of the case in court, and full deliberation given to it by the jury, after they retired to their room, they have declared you guilty.

You stand before the community convicted not only of an offence against the laws of God and man, which is in itself of the most appalling character, one calculated to make the heart and tremor every female in the land, but in this instance you have selected as your victim an aged woman, the ancestor of a numerous and respectable family in this county, whom you knew to be living alone and unprotected. You stealthily crept into her humble home in the night time, and there, by the use of violence, effected your fell purpose upon this defenceless old woman. The prevalence of these crimes in the country at the present time, as well as its enormity, demands, in peremptory duties of the courts, the exercise of such severity of punishment as will prevent its recurrence in the future.

My brother Motter and myself, after careful consideration, have determined, that in the exercise of the discretion confided to us by the law, in declaring the proper punishment for your offence, that protection to the virtue of female portion of the community, who cannot protect themselves, as well as the atrocity of the crime of which you have been convicted, demands the forfeiture of your life. It only remains for me to pronounce upon you the sentence of the law and of the court, which is—That you shall be taken hence to the jail of this county, to be there confined for a time shall be appointed for your execution by the executive authority of the state. From the jail you shall be taken to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck, until you are dead, and I pray that the grace of God may have mercy on you, to employ the short remnant of time that may be left for you on earth, in repentance of your sins, and in seeking from the Saviour of all mankind, that forgiveness which is ever anxious and ready to extend to those who believe in Him, and seek his throne of love.

The prisoner, upon whom this awful sentence was pronounced, did not, during the first several sentences, seem to realize that his death was being sounded. He sat upright, with his hands lying upon his knees, his eyes at first fixed upon the judge, but after that, moving about and glancing at others in the room. This apparent unaffectedness lasted until the word "execution" was said, when there was a slight tremor in his frame, which continued until nearly the close of the sentence. The utmost silence prevailed in the court room during the sentence—every one present seemed impressed with the solemnity of the occasion. The deputy sheriff then took him to the prison. The audience, with the exception of the bar, and a few others, retired. Craig did not manifest a realizing sense of his doom until he reached and entered the jail, when he "broke down" and gave vent to feelings that unmistakably told he knew what his awful punishment would be for one of the most atrocious crimes ever committed."

SHASTA INDIAN WOMEN'S BEAUTY.—The Shasta Indians, like all other American indians, are simply savages; but if they have any distinctive features, it is in the beauty of the women. Instead of the low, squat figure and beastly countenances of the squaws upon the plains, or in the valleys of California, you see tall, lithe forms, expressive features and delicate hands and feet. A traveler in that region says that he saw one young girl, at the base of Mount Shasta, who would be considered beautiful anywhere. She was extremely tall and very slender; her black hair was in two broad plaits, and hung two thirds of the way to the ground; she wore bracelets and anklets upon her limbs, and Barbaric ornaments in her ears; and her flashing eyes and the purple flush upon her cheeks bespoke all the passion and fiery glow of the Orient. As she and her mate stood by the bank of the bright McCloud, beneath the shadow of a stately pine, in the setting sun, I wondered if Joaquin Miller did not have in his mind some other such being when he wrote:—

Let red lips lisp, proud caried, to kiss,
And round limbs lean, and raise, and reach,
In love too passionate for speech,
Too full of blessedness and bliss
For anything but this and this.

AT ANY rate, in a skirmish that took place between the Shasta Indians and the whites, some months after, he was found among the Indians, with whom he sided for some romantic reason, and was captured and imprisoned in the town of Shasta; and this adventure, no doubt, furnished the material from which he wove the magnificent "Tale of the Tall Alcalde."

A TERRIBLE SENTENCE.—The Rev. Olaf Olalsen, a Norwegian minister, was beheaded on the 20th of July, at Tromsoe, the extreme north of Norway. He had been convicted of having poisoned his aged father, and having assassinated his three illegitimate children. He was arrested at the instigation of his former mistress, Hertha Hilgren, and, in consequence of his strenuous denials of guilt, subjected to the torture of being deprived of water for three days, and once, for twenty-four hours, he was chained to the wall of his dungeon in an erect position. The sentence finally pronounced against him was, that for twenty-four hours he should be exposed at the pillory with his right hand nailed to the board of infamy, and that he should then have his right hand chopped off and his head cut od with an axe. Upon hearing his doom, the unfortunate man fell on his knees and implored the audience to shoot him, in order to put an end to his misery. Nearly 20,000 people witnessed the execution of the criminal.

GHASTLY PHENOMENON.—Portsmouth, Ohio, is just now having a terrible sensation. The case is about as follow:—There formerly lived in that place a woman who kept a house of prostitution, and her name was Mollie Stuart. She, like other women of her stripe, had her "man," and his name was Sullivan. Well, a week or two ago her man fell out with her and tapped her on the head, from the effects of which she died in about four days. Since that time the strangest part of the whole matter has transpired, and that is, that on the panes of one of the windows of the house which she formerly occupied is to be seen, at all times, an apparition, or something for which we know no better name, in the form of Mollie Stuart. At least ten thousand people from different parts of the country have been there to see the ghost, nine-tenths of whom are willing to make their solemn oath that Mollie Stuart, or some other woman, is plainly to be seen on the window. Men whose truth and veracity have never been questioned, and who are not believers in the supernatural, are willing to take their "Alfred David" that they saw the form of Mollie on the window as plainly as they ever saw anything in the world.—Fancsburg Kentuckian.

GAMBLING FOR A WOMAN.—The Chinaman, whom our highly civilized brethren of the east are so desirous to have multiplied among them, possess some ideas concerning personal freedom and marital relations somewhat at variance with the spirit of the amended constitution and the established ordinances of the Republic. For instance: Chinamen in this country buy and sell their women, just as they would a pig or a cayuse, and many incidents of a humorous and not infrequently of a serious character grow out of these transactions. Their propensity for gambling is notorious, and "dust" scarce or stakes high, it is not exceptional to stake one of these women on the result of the game. A case of this kind, resulting, it is supposed, with death to the woman, occurred recently. Two Chinamen were gambling at Philipsburg. One was a resident of that place, the owner of a woman, and the other from Pioneer, who wanted her. She was put up by the Philipsburg Chinaman against so much money by the fellow from Pioneer. The Pioneer won and brought his prize home. The Philipsburger followed, reached the Pioneer, and seeking out the woman, plunged a knife into her body, cutting a frightful wound close to the heart, from all indications necessarily fatal. The murderer fled before he could be arrested, and is still at large, and it is supposed the woman is dead. Deputy Sheriff Warren is, we understand, in pursuit. Now wouldn't a little circumstance like this be a pleasant occurrence in some well regulated family down in America?

A BRUTE RAVISHES HIS OWN CHILD.—The special correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat, at Jackson, Mo., writes:—Jacob Coultas, formerly a resident of Scott county, cruelly abandoned his wife and child several years ago and left them to rely upon others for shelter and support. About two years since this fiend in human shape returned to Westchester, Scott county, and finding his child, a sweet, bright little girl, at school, took her by force and left the county. He fled with the child to Crawford county, Kansas, and there this devil ravished her. Recently the girl, now 11 years old, wrote to her mother and disclosed the damnable crime of the unnatural parent. Mrs. Coultas at once consulted a friend, who went to Kansas and had Coultas arrested and tried for the offence. The trial resulted in the scoundre; being found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary for the term of 18 years.

MARRIED BY STAR-LIGHT.—At a marriage at Oakland, Cal., the minister on opening the marriage license discovered that it had been procured in San Francisco, and therefore was not available in Oakland. It was remembered that the end of the pier, which was not far off, had been judicially decided to be in San Francisco. The whole company took the train for the end of the wharf, and the young couple were made one on the pier by the light of the lantern, beneath the starry skies.

HOW IT WORKS.—A Cincinnati youth, guided by the advice of a fortune-teller, sought to make a girl love him by means of electricity, working from under the chair. When the time came, she sprang into the air about three feet, and when she came down she landed in her lover's hair and took about two handfuls, and then told him she hated him. No match.

RECEIPTS OF THE PARK THEATRE, N. Y., FROM APRIL 18, 1832, TO APRIL 31, 1842, WITH THE PLAYS ACTED, ETC.

COMPILED EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

CONTINUED.

On Monday, Nov. 4th, 1833, for Mr. Power's benefit, his own comedy of "Etiquette Run Mad" was acted for the first time in America, "The Irishman in London" and "The Nervous Man," $1,086.75. Tuesday, 5th, Mrs. Austin's second night and Mr. Hill's first, "Cinderella" and "The Green Mountain Boy," $440.25. Wednesday, 6th, Mrs. Austin and Mr. Hill, "The Tempest" and "The Forest Rose," $395. Thursday, 7th, Mr. Hill in "The Foundling of the Sea" and "The Green Mountain Boy," $271.75. Friday, 8th, Mrs. Austin's fourth night. "The Tempest" and "John of Paris," $294.25. Saturday, 9th, Mr. J. H. Hackett commenced an engagement, "The Comedy of Errors," and "Monsieur Jonathon" and "William Thompson," $492. Total for the week, $3,063.75.

On Monday, Nov. 11th, rain fell all day and night, Mr. and Mrs. Wood commenced their engagement, "The Maid of Judah," in which Mr. Walton, a good singer and actor, made his first appearance as Cedric, meeting with success. "The Haunted Inn" was performed therewith, $980.25. Tuesday, 12th, the Woods' second night, "The Jewiller" and "Sweethearts and Wives," $493.25. Wednesday, 13th, Mr. Hackett's second night, "Jonathan in England," "The Kentuckian" and "Petticoat Government," $445. Friday, 13th, the Kembles' seventh night, "The Chimney Piece," "Isabella" and "The Miller's Maid," $364.75.

THE TURF.

THE BALTIMORE FALL RACES.

THIRD DAY, MONDAY, OCT. 28th.

Owing to the heavy rains on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 24th and 25th, the third day's racing of the meeting of the Maryland Jockey Club was obliged to be postponed until Monday, Oct. 28th. On that day the attendance was both large and fashionable, despite of the unpleasant appearance of the weather, which was dark and cloudy, indicating rain. The course was very heavy and holding, the horses sinking fetlock deep into the dark, red clay, which constitutes the soil of the track, and which was over six inches deep on the inside next the rails. In consequence of this, the horses were compelled to run on the extreme outside, and fast time was therefore out of the question. It proved an unfortunate day for that large class of turfmen who always "go" for the favorites, for in the four races run they were beaten in every instance. In the two miles handicap, John Merryman's Defender was made a great "pet," the plungers backing him heavily against the field, but he was disgracefully beaten by every horse in the race, which was won by an outsider, Dr. Weldon's grey filly, Mary Louise. The doctor did not this time commit the error of judgment, he was guilty of at Jerome Park, putting up a boy that could not ride a donkey, owing to which his fine filly there lost the race; on the contrary, he secured the services of little Robinson, a clever light-weight jockey, and he piloted the beautiful grey to an easy victory. In the mile dash, Shedrick Ryder, the representative of the stable of the confederacy, was freely backed against the field, but her supporters hoping, by putting down the money sreonily, to get back some of their losses on Tubman, but again did the plungers burn their fingers, for Nevada, the fleet sister to Salina, upset all their calculations by winning the race in a canter from the favorite, who was obliged to be content with second honors. In the selling race, Brennus carried the white and crimson spots of Mr. John Chamberlin in triumph to the front, thus inflicting another heavy blow on the backers of favorites, who had plunged recklessly on Sanford, Thomas Giordano's first victory since his accession to the turf last spring, and he was the recipient of many warm congratulations. In the Bowie Stakes, four mile heats, Tubman gloriously avenged the double defeat of his stable companion, Harry Bassett, by Monarchist, at Jerome Park, by defeating and distancing Preakness, the bearer of the blue jacket and cap of Mr. Sanford, who was made the favorite over the field. By this performance Tubman has decisively settled the question of his ability to stay a distance, which many have hitherto doubted, by winning in the easiest and gamest manner possible, and there is no doubt he could have distanced all his opponents in the first heat if his jockey had been so inclined. It will be remembered that the same disbelief in Glenelg's staying qualities existed when he won this same four mile heat race two years ago, beating a large field of proved four milers, such as Carrie Atherton, Plantagenet, Nannie Douglas and Abdel Kader. It is probable that Tubman will be the representative of Col. McDaniels' stable in the great $20,000 purse race of four mile heats at New Orleans next spring, when he will have to meet Monarchist, Lyttleton, Annie Bush, King Henry, Nannie Douglass and others.

THE FIRST RACE

was a handicap sweepstakes of $25 each, for all ages, with $500 added by the Maryland Jockey Club; a dash of two miles; the second horse to receive $150 out of the stakes. There were four acceptances of the handicapper's weights—Defender, 5 years, 96 lbs.; Mary Louise, 4 years, 90 lbs.; Fanchon, 4 years, 97½ lbs. (including 2½ lbs. overweight); and John Merryman, 4 years, 84 lbs. Defender was thought to be so well in that he was freely backed against the field, John Merryman being second choice, and the two fillies each bringing an equal amount. After several false starts they got off together, with Fanchon in the lead, Mary Louise second, John Merryman third, and Defender last. Going around the turn, Mary Louise deprived Fanchon of the lead, and directly afterwards Defender passed the latter. Half way along the back-stretch Fanchon went up and challenged Defender, raced with him a few strides, and then quitting him, made play for Mary Louise. At the half mile pole the two fillies were lapped, and continued so along the lower-stretch to the head of the last quarter. When fairly into the straight run in, Robinson gave Mary Louise her head, and quitting Fanchon, she galloped home an easy winner by four lengths, Fanchon second, ten lengths before John Merryman, and Defender beaten off. Time 4:14. Value of the stakes $600. Summary:—

PIMLICO COURSE, NEAR BALTIMORE, MD.—THIRD DAY OF THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MARYLAND JOCKEY CLUB, OCT. 28, 1872.—FIRST RACE.—Handicap sweepstakes for all ages, $25 each, with $500 added by the Maryland Jockey Club; the second horse to receive $150; closed with four acceptances; value of stakes, $600; a dash of two miles.

THE SECOND RACE

was a handicap sweepstakes of $20 each, for three year olds, with $500 added by the Jockey Club; the second horse to receive $100; dash of one mile. The acceptances were Buckden, 110 lbs.; Sue Ryder, 105 lbs.; Silent Friend, 105 lbs.; Nevada, 97 lbs., and Jennie Patterson, 80 lbs. Silent Friend was withdrawn, and Sue Ryder was made the favorite, bringing $300 to Nevada's $125, Buckden $92 and Jennie Patterson $45. The horses got off well together, Buckden showing in front before they had run fifty yards. Before rounding the turn Nevada took the lead, but Buckden resumed it on approaching the quarter pole, Sue Ryder and Nevada lying at his quarters. On the lower-stretch Nevada shot past Buckden, and increasing her lead at every stride as they came up the home-stretch, she won in a canter by twenty lengths, Sue Ryder second, ten lengths between Jennie Patterson, and Buckden last. Time, 2:00. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—SECOND RACE.—Handicap sweepstakes, for three year olds; $20 each, with $500 added by the Maryland Jockey Club; the second horse to receive $100; closed with five acceptances; value of stakes, $650; a dash of a mile.

THE THIRD RACE

was a selling race, for all ages, for a purse of $500, mile dash. The conditions were that horses entered to be sold for $1,000 should carry full weight for age; to be sold for $750, allowed 5 lbs.; $500, allowed 7 lbs.; if for $300, allowed 14 lbs. The entries and weights were as follows:—Cadence, $300, 91 lbs.; Faddaleen, $750, 105 lbs.; Sanford, $800, 111 lbs., and Brennus, $500, 91 lbs. In pools, Sanford was the favorite, selling for $100; Brennus, $65; Faddaleen, $45, and Cadence, $38. When the drum was tapped Faddaleen jumped off with the lead, but was speedily deprived of it by Brennus, who made the pace so hot that at the quarter pole he was leading four lengths. He increased this advantage to eight lengths on the back-stretch, Sanford being second, and Cadence third. The latter made a vigorous effort to reach Brennus as they came up the home-stretch, and looked momentarily dangerous, but when within fifty yards of the stand he suddenly quit, and Brennus won by two lengths, Sanford third, and Faddaleen last. They got off well together, Blind Tom taking the lead, with Lochiel next him, but Tammany, rushing past them both, took the first hurdle in advance, and continued to show the way over the next three hurdles, Lochiel being second to him all the way round. When the fourth hurdle on the home-stretch had been cleared, Blind Tom dashed to the front and led past the judges' stand a couple of lengths, Tammany falling into the rear. Blind Tom, who was ridden by Gaffney, led Lochiel two lengths over the fifth and sixth hurdles, but at the seventh the latter had got to his quarters. Entering the home-stretch, Lochiel passed Blind Tom, and he seemed to have the race in hand, but Gaffney, giving his horse both whip-cord and steel, Blind Tom answered gamely, and both horses rose simultaneously at the last hurdle. Lochiel hit it hard as he went over, and weight telling on him, Blind Tom drew away and won the race by two lengths, Tammany a bad third. Time, 4:38. The knowing ones looked aghast at this result, for they were already counting in anticipation their prospective winnings, and their mortification was great at thus seeing the cup of victory dashed from their lips. The betting on this event was very heavy. Summary:—

BALTIMORE, MD., Oct. 29th, 1872.—MARYLAND JOCKEY CLUB.—FOURTH AND LAST DAY OF THE ANNUAL MEETING.—Hurdle Handicap, purse $500; two miles, over eight hurdles; $400 to the winner, and $100 to the second horse.

Time, 4:35.

THE SECOND RACE

was a dash of one mile, for two year olds, for a purse of $400, the winner of the Central Stakes included. The entries were Austral, Coronet, Merodac, Survivor, John Preston and Chief Engineer. In the pools, Survivor and Merodac sold for even amounts, the latter having slightly the call at the finish, the other four being bunched in the field. Some time was spent in getting them started, but at last a good send off was effected. Merodac took the lead, closely pressed by Survivor, and the rest in a bunch. Along the back-stretch Merodac increased his lead to a length and a half, Coronet running lapped on Survivor. The latter closed on Merodac on the lower turn, collared him opposite the lower end of the grand stand, and, after a brilliant and punishing finish, was beaten by a short half neck in 1:54¾, Coronet a bad third, and the rest beaten off. Merodac, the winner, is a promising racing-like chestnut colt by Australian, out of Catina's dam, but, unfortunately, has no engagement next season. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—SECOND RACE.—Purse, $400, for two year olds; winner of the Central Stakes to be excluded; dash of one mile.

Time, 1:39¾.

THE THIRD RACE

was the Consolation Purse of $500, for all ages that had been beaten during the meeting; mile heats. The entries were Joe Daniels, Buckden, Wheatly, Teetotal and Lord Baltimore. The race was regarded as such a moral certainty for Joe Daniels that pools were sold without him, and depended on the horse winning the second money. In these Wheatly had the call, bringing $75, Buckden $70 and the field $30.

First Heat.—Buckden, Joe Daniels and Wheatly got off nearest when the drum was tapped, the others a length behind. Joe Daniels' long, sweeping stride, soon carried him to the front, and steadily increasing his lead, galloped home the easiest of winners by six lengths in 1:58, Wheatly second and Buckden third, Lord Baltimore distanced.

Second Heat.—Wheatly was now the favorite for second money over Buckden. The latter took the lead at the start, with Wheatly second, the favorite third and Teetotal last. They ran pretty well bunched to the quarter pole, where Teetotal fell back beaten, the other three running almost lapped. On the lower turn Joe Daniels came out, and leaving his competitors at every stride, won the heat and race easily in 1:56¾, Buckden second, Teetotal distanced. Summary:—

of the day, and the last of the meeting, was a two mile heat, handicap, for horses that had run at the meeting, for a purse of $1,100, of which the second horse received $250. The entries were—Cadence, 75 lbs; Arizona, 85 lbs; Sue Ryder, 82 lbs; sanford, 90 lbs; Flora McIvor, 90 lbs; Frank Hampton, 98 lbs. In pools Frank Hampton brought $160; Arizona, $75; Sue Ryder and Cadence, $60 each; field, $30.

First Heat.—Frank Hampton was the first off, but was speedily deprived of the lead by Cadence, who held it throughout the first mile, passing under the string a head in front of Sanford, who was as far before the favorite, Frank Hampton, the Ryder being fourth, Arizona fifth and Flora McIvor last. Arizona became third on the back-stretch, Frank Hampton falling back. On the lower-stretch Arizona, and Frank closed on Cadence, and the latter got his head in front as they turned into the home-stretch, but unable to retain his position, he fell back. Arizona then challenged Cadence, and after a fine, exciting struggle, beat him to the score by a half a length, Frank Hampton five lengths behind Cadence, and Sue Ryder distanced. Time, 3:58.

Second Heat.—Arizona now became the favorite, selling in pools for $170; Cadence, $45, and the field, $25. A capital start was had, all the horses going off abreast. Cadence quickly showed in front, with Sanford and Frank Hampton next, and Arizona making a waiting race of it. It was a pretty contest for nearly a mile, Cadence leading half a length as they entered on the second mile, Sanford, Arizona, Hampton and Flora following in the order named. The horses became bunched on the turn, and then old Flora McIvor assumed the lead, and held it until half way along the lower-stretch, where Arizona challenged and passed her, and coming away won the heat and race as she pleased by three lengths, Dr. Weldon quite unexpectedly securing second money with Flora McIvor, Cadence being third, and Sanford distanced. Time, 3:57½. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—FOURTH RACE.—Purse $1,100; a handicap for all ages, for horses that had run during the meeting; $900 to the winner and $200 to the second; two mile heats.

THE WINNING STABLES AT BALTIMORE.—We give the gross winnings of the several stables that have won first, second and third money, at the meeting just concluded. Col. McDaniels & Co.'s stable heads the list, with $19,225, of which $13,800 is to be credited to Hubbard, $3,825 to Fubman, $1,500 to Joe Daniels, and $100 to Sue Ryder. The Tennessee stable of A. C. Franklin stands next, with $1,750, of which Arizona won $1,100, and Nevada $650. Gov. Bowie is indebted to Catesby for the $1,800 he won, and Mr. M. Sanford to Monarchist ($600), and Preakness ($450) for the $1,050 he is credited with. Mr. John F. Chamberlin wins $1,000, the joint earnings of True Blue and Brennus, $500 each. Dr. Weldon, thanks to Mary Louise and Flora McIvor, wins $700; Lawrence and Coffin, $500, with Lochiel; J. Donohue, $500 with Blind Tom; M. A. Tully, $500, with Buckden; W. W. Glenn, $400 with Merodac; J. O'Donnell, $150, with Fanchon; W. Jennings, $150, with Defender, and F. M. Hall, $50, with John Merryman.

RACING AND TROTTING NOTES.

Mr. Robert Steel of Philadelphia has sold his well-known Hambletonian gelding, the Buffalo Horse, to Mr. Walter Penrose, a wealthy young resident of that city. This horse recently trotted a wagon low down in the thirties. His new owner intends using him exclusively for driving on the road.—The thoroughbred three year old filly Firefly, by War Dance, out of Alexandra, owned by Messrs. Rice and McCormack, died last week at Nashville, Tenn. A short time before, she had broken her thigh while at play in the pasture, and died from the injury.—The price paid by Mr. John O'Donnell for Meteor was $2,000. He will be trained by the colored man, Alfred, next season.—Mr. Belmont offers for sale one of the fine three year old stallion Wade Hampton, by Asteroid, out of Mary Churchill, the dam of Hamburg, for $500. A better bred horse cannot be found, and he was a good race horse, having won the Sequel Stakes at Saratoga this summer. He is sound in every particular, except bad splints on both legs, which prevent him being trained; but as a stallion he will be very valuable.....Roswell C. Miner, of Scarsben, N. Y., died last week, from blanders, a fearful disease. He had a horse inflicted with that disease, which in blowing from his nostrils, discharged a portion of the poisonous mucus, a drop of which entered one of Mr. Miner's eyes. Within twenty-four hours his eye was much swollen, attended by great pain, and although medical aid was procured, his case was pronounced a hopeless one, for the malignant virus had so penetrated his system, that his flesh soon turned purple, and he died a most agonising death. Owners of glandered horses ought to be compelled, under heavy penalties, to destroy them immediately on the discovery of the disease. One of the heaviest planters in Mississippi, the late James C. Wilkins, in 1836, lost 76 horses and mules from this fearful disease, and had to burn all his plantation stables, which had cost $8,0 0 erecting, to destroy all taint of contagion or infection.....The trotting stallion Pilot Temple, by Pilot Joe, out of Flora Temple's dam, Madame Temple, has traveled 9,000 miles this season, and trotted 13 races. He won first money seven times, and second money six times, making a total of $10,000.....Mr. James Talbot, of Townsend Valley, has a four year old mule that is 18¾ hands high, and well proportioned also.....The western trotter, Mohawk, Jr., has challenged Rarus to trot a race, mile heats, a side, on the Buckeye course, mile heats, best three in five; Red Cloud beat Mohawk, Jr., at Dayton, with apparent ease, and it is probable the match will be made.....Miss Julia, one of the fastest mares that ever ran on the English turf, died recently from inflammation at Neusham Stud Farm. She was foaled in 1854, and was by Harkaway, out of Maria Day, by Physician. She won seventy-seven races, running until she was five year old, and was then sold to Mr. Cockson for a brood mare, for $2,000. Although a remarkably fine shaped mare, with legs and feet of iron, she proved a complete failure at the stud, for of the five foals she had, not one lived beyond a few months, although they all inherited their dam's beautiful formation.....Lon Morris has sold his fast trotting mare, Nettie Morris, to a gentleman of this city for $7,500.....A match for $25,000 a side, four mile heats, is proposed between George Treat's racehorse, Thad. Stephens, and Capt. G. A. Johnson's horse, Phil. Sheridan, and then to enter the winner for the $20,000 purse, at New Orleans, next spring.....There is considerable talk of an extra running meeting at Baltimore, to be held in the spring, and, like the fall meeting, under the auspices of the Maryland Jockey Club. The meeting just concluded was, notwithstanding the wet weather, a financial success.....The well known trainer, Dr. Weldon, is suing John Morrisey in the Westchester courts for non-payment of claim for training the racehorse Defender, owned by the latter. It seems that the doctor agreed to train the horse for $1,000 and half his winnings, but after Defender had won the Summer Handicap, at the Saratoga August meeting, Morrissey refused to pay the doctor any portion of the stakes, claiming that he only owed $1 per day for training. The usual charge for training is $3 per day.....Mr. James McCauley, of New York, last week purchased of Mr. Ralf, of Philadelphia, the former owner of Lady Thorn, a three year old brown filly for $1,500, and a two year old bay filly for $1,000, both by his stallion, Mambrino Pilot.....The circus riders, Fish and Rowland, took two performing horses that were sick of the epidemic away with them to England, last week, on board the steamer Egypt, of the National line. The English consul at this port notified the authorities at Queenstown and Liverpool of the fact.....Mr. A. Welch's famous brown horse, Lyttleton, by Leamington, out of Fanny Holton, has gone south, to be trained for the winter and spring campaign at New Orleans. He accompanied Major Franklin's Tennessee stable, and on arrival at New Orleans will be transferred to the charge of Col. Tom Patterson, who will prepare him for the great four mile heat race to be run in the spring.

LUCY DISTANCES OCCIDENT.

The trot between Lucy and Occident, for a purse of $7,500, came off at Treat's Park, Alameda, Cal., on Oct. 30th, in the presence of about ten thousand spectators. The track was not in good condition; a portion was wet and heavy. Both horses were in good trim and excellent spirits. The pools at noon sold: Lucy, $60; Occident, $15; and the time pools, 2:21 at $40, and 2:19 and 2:20 at $17. A large amount of money was pending on the race, principally on time pools. In the first heat Occident drew the pole. A good start was made on the second scoring. Both trotted evenly to the quarter pole, when Occident broke up and lost badly. At reaching the half mile the former then gathered up and closed the breach within two lengths, when Lucy passed the score. Time, 2:25½. In the second heat a fine start was made after considerable scoring. Occident announced breaking soon after they got off. The chances of the heat were lost soon after passing the first quarter. Lucy continued to gain to the end, and passed the score, leaving Occident distanced with 30 feet margin. Time, 2:20. Considering the state of the track, Lucy's time created surprise. Great disappointment was manifested at the result, and the people have lost confidence in the California horse. Summary:—

A FOUR-MILER GONE.—We learn with regret that the celebrated four year old bay filly, Annie Bush, by Lexington, out of Bruner, by imported Albion, broke down at Nashville, Tenn., on Oct 26th. This will prove a great loss to the racing turf, and especially to her owners, Messrs. George Rice and J. McCormack, who entertained great hopes of winning the $20,000 four-mile heat purse at New Orleans with her next spring. She won the four-mile heat Post Stake at the past Metairie spring meeting, beating Nannie Douglas (who won the first and was distanced in the third heat), Conductor and Pilgrim in 7:39; 7:38¾; 8:21, and the four-mile heat purse at the Louisiana Jockey Club spring meeting last April, beating Morlacchi (her own sister) and Tom Corbett in 7:36; 7:34¾. She will be put to the stud.

THE FOUR MILE HEAT PURSE OF $20,000.—There having been some doubts existing among turfmen whether the proposed purse of $20,000 for a race of four mile heats would actually be given at the spring meeting of the Louisiana Jockey Club in 1873, the latter body have come forward, we are informed, and assumed the heavy pecuniary responsibility involved. The meeting last April, beating Morlacchi (her own sister) and Tom Corbett in 7:36; 7:34¾. She will be put to the stud.

THE FOUR MILE HEAT PURSE OF $20,000.—There having been some doubts existing among turfmen whether the proposed purse of $20,000 for a race of four mile heats would actually be given at the spring meeting of the Louisiana Jockey Club in 1873, the latter body have come forward, we are informed, and assumed the heavy pecuniary responsibility involved. The meeting was originally intended to raise the purse by subscription, and $17,000 was raised in this manner. The action of the Jockey Club has superseded this course of procedure, and the race is now a fixed fact.

A CANINE CONTROVERSY, for a century a side, took place near Hoboken, N. J., on Nov. 1st, between Bill Lowe's brindle dog, Dan, and Ed. Matthews' white dog, Prince, the weight fought at being 25 pounds. Lowe handled his pet, and Tom McCarty looked after Prince. The fight lasted nearly five hours, and was won by the white, both animals being badly used up at the finish.

THE GAME OF CHESS.

An Enigma.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY H. R. H.

There are two Kings who rule with stainless sceptre
O'er subject bowing at each slight behest;
At variance, ever warring with each other,
Themselves unwarlike, stallions of rest—
The prowess of whose chieftains may be known
By every nation and in every zone.

Few gentle female traits their Queens possessing,
Like woman strong of mind, love to engage
In noisy contests, injuries redressing,
Their King's chary battles and their own to wage;
The Kings, of valiant heart but slow to act,
Leave great achievements to their Queens' shrewd tact.

Castles of ancient make yield strong protection,
The courage oft of faltering troops inspires;
And there, from battlement and each projection,
Is hurled, unceasingly, a storm of fire;
And long as banners float o'er castles grey,
Bold warriors will pursue the heady fray.

Surplic'd and mitred priests the chancel leaving,
Don mail and helmet as with one accord,
With two-fold aim, to God and monarch cleaving,
One hand the crozier grasps and one the sword;
But, whether prayer or sword disperse the foe,
Bid those who fight these battles let me know.

Bold, mounted horsemen, fired with reckless daring,
Rush on the field to turn the battle's tide,
With visors closed, with firm and martial bearing,
And oft a doubtful victory decide;
They devious ways untiringly pursue,
Now by the castle's gate, now foot to view.

Foot soldiers staunch form body guards of yeomen,
Defend the nobles, hover round the King,
Meet face to face in conflict with the foemen,
Ever alert and always on the wing;
Each faithful to his chief, to fear a stranger,
Their valor strengthens in the hour of danger.

Each in his place, these hosts of man's creation
Advance, retreat, move right or left, or stand,
Obedience yield, whate'er the rank or station,
To all the leaders urge or what command;
They, at a word, the waves of war control,
And from confusion bring harmonious whole.

Far back within that misty, orient clime,
That poets love to talk about in rhyme,
Where Ind's bright waters flow o'er sands of gold,
The aged sage, Gotama, did unfold
This famous riddle to his pupil friend,
And oft would they from learned books unbend
To watch the warriors struggling on the field,
Ride down the foemen, or their sabres wield.
And witty Haroun, who, at later day,
Ruled many a tented tribe with genial sway,
Would lay aside the robe of royalty,
And from his throne descend awhile to see
This imaged warfare as the Vizier Grand
The forces marshaled with a subtle hand,
Or Abbasaya, with a graceful skill,
Beat the disabled leaders to her woman's will.
And still in camp, and court, and rural home,
Fought are their battles and their victories won,
And nations yet to come, with joy untold,
Will watch the combats of these chieftains bold.
And now these mystic men of magic mould
Prythee discover and their names unfold.

To Correspondents.

A. Z. HUGGINS, Pueblo, Colorado.—Thanks for remembrance. You are right, the CLIPPER does just "penetrate everywhere." Miron and Phanu will write you in time for Santa Fe. Success to you.

DAMARIS.—A. Z. H. thanks you for compliment to No. 830; but in his 815 says:—"His profound solution wont do at all. Suppose I reply to K x P with 1...B to K 4, how is he going to effect mate?"

J. C., Table Rock, Cal.—Welcome; come often. It is not only not "contrary to our rules," but in accordance alike with them and our inclination to assist all honest inquirers. Prob. No. 818 admits of two sol'n, viz.:—1...B to R 8; 2...K to B 5, and 3...R mates; or (prettier, as preserving the cross), 1...K Kt to Kt 8; B to B 6, and R mates.

P. G. AULT, Milwaukee.—Thank you for the problem, which shall have due examination. Solutions correct. We have re-examined T. M. B.'s last 3-move by the author's copy, and find it correct.

JOS. N. BARSON.—We regret being obliged to own that among our "stacks" of correspondence your sulmate has got lost; will you kindly duplicate?

GEO. E. CARPENTER.—The valuable summaries and continuation of your article to hand.

WESTMINSTER PAPERS, London.—Our correspondent, "Damaris," is "quite positive he is right" in solving Frank Healey's 7-fold, Ajax shield prob., which we copied, re foco, in the—1...King to 2. Now, if P to K 4 2...Q to K B 6, mate; if B move, Q to K B 8; if move on the file it occupies, or to B 2, Q to her B 7; if R to R 2, Q to her Kt 4; and if R to Q 2, Kt mates. Is that conclusive, and will it "wash?"

G. REICHELEK.—Thanks for renewed favors; also for advance look at problem.

ALONZO, Newport (Mon.), Eng.—And you, too. The revised 6-move was in time; we like it much. The dedication sulmate only awaits the decision of Mr. Carpenter. Glad to know the CLIPPER pleased you and Mr. Evans.

Notes on Kling's Chess Euclid.

BY GEO. E. CARPENTER.

Among the many points of this excellent work that invite a review, the following notes are restricted, chiefly, to the status of each problem as regards its merits in the light of the Laws of Composition. As connected with the first head, occasional remarks upon parallelisms have been made and illustrations given; as connected with the second, correct readings of ideas lucidly rendered, and suggestions as to the elimination of other objectionable features have been offered. The opportunity has been seized, however, occasionally to introduce other subjects of a kindred nature as they occurred to running.

The list of Errata prepared by John D. McLean and published in these columns during parts of the years 1859-60, has been made use of, and instances wherein this writer has been found to be wrong are pointed out in their proper places. In addition to the help derived from the list just referred to, valuable assistance has been received from E. H. C., of Washington, and C. C. B., of Canajoharie. Where these particular sources to which the writer is indebted is indicated by the corresponding initials.

With no intention to write a thorough and comprehensive review, and with no pretence that the writer is that "abler analyst" to whom Dr. McL. left the further examination of the subject, but with the desire to place upon record some discoveries since made, the notes that follow are submitted as the result of many pleasant hours of study and comparison.

White gives mate in two moves, by 1...Q to K 4, &c.

This beautiful idea has been elegantly treated by Healey; see his Nos. 21, 42 and 113. No. 21 is as follows:—

WHITE.—King at Q B 2; Queen at K B 6; Rook at K Kt 5, and Bishop at Q 4th.

BLACK.—King at his Q B 4; Pawns at Q B 3, Q Kt 4, Q R 4, Q R 5d, and K B 4th.

(a) For many years P to Q 3d, in answer to Castles, was considered the "normal defence." The move in the text may be first fairly said to have been brought out by Zukertort vs. Andersen, in their famous match last year, and the 5th partie of that struggle (see our game No. 805) stands its great exponent.

(b) Not a good move.—P. R. No! As shown by Herr Zukertort in all his defences in the match just cited, 10...K Kt to K 2 is the proper move. The game ran thus:—

10...	K Kt to K 2	15...Q Kt to Q 4	Q to K 3
11...Q Kt to K 2	P-Q Kt 4	16...Q × Kt P	Castles

14...Q-her B 4	Q-K 2	19...Q R-Q sq	K R-K sq, and

Defence won in 8 or 10 more moves.

(c) Neatly tried, but "too thin" for an old practitioner like his present antagonist.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Nov. 4th, 1872.

The epizoozoo has exercised a depressing influence on theatricals, thinning off the houses as well as the horses. In so far as the means of conveyance to and from the theatres grew unbeautifully less as the week advanced, leaving the lovers of the drama to foot it if they desired to visit our histrionic temples. This was something never dreamed of in our virtuous philosophy; something "new and novel," as our programme writers would style it; it created a genuine sensation for the time being, and caused the utterance of many an oath against the illwind that blew the distemper in this direction. But the situation is more encouraging now, and with the rejuvenation of our Tartarean and other steeds, a like recurrence is not to be dreaded.

The "great west" continues to produce all sorts of living curiosities, and it is no wonder that it is a paradise for showmen. In Terre Haute a young man has been discovered who cuts, fits and makes all the dresses worn by his mother and sisters. This age is full of wisdom and genius, which only require patience and capital to make Terre Haute a great nation. What if this young man should extend the field of his operations beyond the monotony of the home circle? What if he should be prevailed upon to fit and make up other females than those of his own family? Terre Haute would become a veritable Mecca, at whose shrine beauty and fashion would "bend the pregnant hinges of the knee," and worship that young man as no other human nature has been idolized before. And once the blockade opened to the fair forms of lovely woman, the land would be overrun with other manly dressmakers, until the seventeen years' locusts and Boston's commercial travelers would be a sweet boon in comparison. We fear to pursue the subject further. But as if to offset Terre Haute's young man, Fort Wayne boldly comes forth and courageously produces a another young man who distinguishes himself by sleeping forty-eight consecutive hours every day. Verily this person should be presented with the champion's belt for being the fastest sleeper on record. What a great attraction he would prove for some of our sleepy audiences.....We don't know what we have in store, but we should have sent to us such notes as the following:—

Bordentown, N. J., Nov. 1, 1872.

EDITOR CLIPPER.—Dear Sir.—Knowing your great influence, and knowledge of everything, I write to you to get me a sit to stand in a store. Can't procure anywhere. Please assist me.

We cannot see our way very clear, for the writer's language is somewhat antagonistical. The opening is very well, and to the point, expressing a beautiful truth, you will perceive, and as far as we are concerned we do not object, for that matter, but how he expects a sit to stand, is what we cannot understand; if the young person should have a leisure moment to put his proposition in a more lucid light, we shall be the better enabled to entertain and act upon the same.....For the benefit of restaurant proprietors our readers will pardon us for remarking that soft shell clams are ripening, and the trees should be taken in before the frost sets in. Lunch route-ers will please notice, and country papers copy. It may also be worthy of the attention of caterers that fish will be in season, and that oysters should be prepared with croton bugs, which possess a richer flavor than flies, bring a better price, and make a pleasant chowder for parties returning from the theatre.....More improvements going on at the Olympic; one of the latest ornaments to the house is a new Gabel. [This is a funny little conceit.—ED.].....Combinations are all the go—there are travelling combinations, circus combinations, fly-by-night combinations and run-by-day epizootics; combinations run by gentlemen of the male persuasion, and gal-axies of talent engineered by females. We'll tell you how some of these combinations are formed:—

YE COMBINATION.

Three excellent performers meet, perchance, some summer's day;
They have the usual round of "chaff," and funny things to say;
Relate the newest little points in "locals," and "squibs" and "screams,"
Lament the smallness of the "sals," compared with former times.
One says:—"There's many things I'd like, but salary won't work
Let's form a combination, boys, and 'hogg' the 'western circuit!'"
So Jigs, the "Lion Banjoist"—"the finest ever seen"—
The Autocrat of Minstrelsy" (whatever that may mean!)
Combines with Flare and Flipenup, "The Kings of Song and Dance."
They hire a man of nerve and skill to travel "in advance,"
Then seize upon a clarionet, two fiddles and a drum,
To play outside the hall o' nights and make the people come.
A "middle man," who might have put Noah Webster in the shade—
Whose sentences are "fearfully and wonderfully made:"
And thus equipped, our heroes start, "the province" to bless;
What can we do, but shake their hands and wish them all success!

.....Chicago is once more playing at the game of brag. This time it is about a wonderful dog, that unties horses which he finds tied to posts along the streets, then jumps into the wagon and takes a ride. What there is wonderful in this we fail to preceive. Now men do that kind of thing every day in New York and yet nothing is thought of it. If that wonderful (?) dog should go as far as our men, and set the town on fire, as they have, if they were done with, there would be something in it, something to boast of, but the mere untying the horse and taking him on a pleasure excursion shows what a very little thing Chicago considers wonderful.....We have been a good deal worried and disturbed in reading about that poor fellow who was dragged off by a balloon, a couple of weeks ago, and who, when last seen, was four hundred feet, let go his hold, and came down a corpse. This was truly a heart-rending case. Could such a calamity have been foretold, we venture to say that one hundred thousand persons would have been in attendance to see the dreadful sight, and the clever showman would have reaped a rich harvest. If any intrepid aeronaut would like to reap that exhibition his heirs and other assigns can make plenty of money out of it.....Our circus men are coming to town, some quite flush, some full of lush, some winners of much renown. But of all the truth tellers, commend us to the gentlemen of the sawdust. Hearing of the arrival in the city of Billy Darnell, agent and go-ahead man for the "Eldorial Circus, Cuttalian Caravan and Terrestrial Menagerie," we went to his hotel to interview him, and find out how the old thing has been working this season. If ever any circus man told the truth, Billy Darnell is that man; he's so used to telling the truth, that we really don't believe he could speak falsely if he tried to, and that's saying a great deal for a showman. When we applied for admission to the presence of the great showman, we were told that he could not be seen until next day, but when we repeated our request, sent word on a played-out season ticket who we were, and that it was for the good of the nation we sought the interview, William weakened and let us in. The showman was reclining, in a graceful attitude of mingled repose and contentment, on a four-dollar lounge, while surrounding him were all the luxuries that ever attend the movements of persons of his class; the walls were beautifully decorated with works of art—three sheet posters, streamers, gutter snipes, and various other specimens of the colored printer's skill, or the printer's colored skill, or the colored skill of the printer, we forget which. He was smoking a real meerschaum—what ignorant English ale-house proprietors call "long pipes." Plums of smoke wreathed their many-fashioned fancies in circlets and cloudlets in the ambient air, the interior of the showman's room presented a tout ensemble most gorgeous to behold. We took all this in, including Billy, at a glance. Then ensued the following conversation, verbatim, as taken on the spot, by our own literatrix:—

Good morrow, me noble Rege: I hope I find thee well, after thy lengthy journey in the wilds of the dreary west.

Thanks, your royal highness, the duties of an agent for such a concern as the Cerulean are by no means a sinecure.

I would speak with thee anon, if your precious time will permit of the interview.

Pray be seated. Ho! without there—more wine.

[It may be proper to remark that ho! without there, never came within there.—ED.]

I have come to ask whether the Etherial has made any money this season. The air is full of rumors that the Cerulean made a loss.

The air and all that in it lies when it gives vitality to such baseless fabrications. We have placed in bank to our credit two hundred thousand dollars, the profits of the season's venture.

What of the Continental Ellipse?

Sunk every dollar they had, and had to leave their biggest elephant with the landlord of the hotel before he'd give 'em a cold lunch.

Surely the Zoologistic and Hippodromonic did well.

Their stock was levied upon by the sheriff out in Baldwinsville, and our manager gave 'em money enough to get home.

I have heard glorious accounts of the success of the Bivalvic Equestro-Aggregatic.

Lies, all lies! They lost thirty thousand dollars before they struck Canada, and when they got into the dominion they were hit hard with the epizootic, and when they got back to the states the sheriff had carried off two hundred of their horses. They said it was the measles, but I know better; it was the sheriff who took the steeds.

Is it true that the Stentine Versaculer and Trignometric Fullminator and Reverberating Museum cleared seventy thousand dollars?

What! That concern! Do you know where they are now? Out in Zanesville, waiting for our manager to bring 'em home. Why they got swamped, me boy, before the season was half over. Ha! ha! and did you believe such a yarn?

I put but little confidence in the story of the imbecile, for I have learned to place such unmitigated liars at their true valuation. Do you know anything of the Alligator Caravan?

The Alligators were bought in by Zeb. Weeks, and we bought out Zeb. Weeks two weeks after; so you see there were two weeks. Ha! ha! ha! ha! two weeks, ha! ha!

Ha! ha! very good, indeed; I see you still possess the spirit of fun.

Yes, I do a little in that way now and then for several clowns, but the ungrateful dogs never give me credit for a line.

That's the way of the world: true genius is ever the victim of impostors. Baldy Spencer came home with flying colors, and claims fifty thousand as the net profits.

Did Baldy tell you of the Why, my dear sir, the whole concern is ours; we took the show off their hands and run it ourselves; we pay Baldy a salary to oversee the boys; Baldy's a good feller, but he will lie.

They say that the Cerulean kept the Binstailly concern alive.

Can you tell if that report is correct?

You have been rightly informed; we did stake the Binstail, and loaned it some of our surplus stock that they did not do the square thing, though, and we seized the entire establishment, and fitted it out to go south this winter as a branch of the Etherial.

Watson's Excelsior Histadonic Subterfuge is reported as having done well this year. They only came to stay one week, and have been here a month, so I've been told.

Between you and me—though I don't want it to go any further, for we are on good terms with the Subterfuge—the concern had to stay here; they got it by the plate of glass dodge. Washington five thousand dollars for printing; they owe three thousand dollars for horse feed; and they haven't paid salaries for three weeks. We have promised to take the whole calabash off their hands to save it from the sheriff; but say nothing about that, you know. We feel sorry for the boys, but the concern hasn't been properly managed.

Have you any news of the Sacred Bull and Horned Frog Concatenation that left Doversville last May?

Didn't you hear about them? Good joke! They got nipped on their first stand—cut their own throats by the Cerulian, so we paid their first stand—cut their own throats by the Cerulian, so we paid their bills and run 'em on a side show with the Etherial ever since. We made a good thing of it.

If not taxing your patience too much, me liege, I should like to ask a few more questions ere I depart.

I am altogether at your service. What, ho! without there; more wine, I say. [It is needless to say that Billy's craving for wine is the cause of his ho-ing for more wine not being regarded. We write jokes for him, too, once in a while.—ED.] When I can serve the cause of truth and science, my time is my country's.

I honor such noble sentiments, sir. Mr. Darnell, a report has gained currency that Barnum's Octogeneric Mammoth, Unparalleled Commingling of Incongruities, and Malevolent Combination of Ambidextrous Curiosities are winding up the most successful season ever known in the annals of the profession. Can you corroborate this?

The truth is that concern had a narrow escape, and was only saved by our getting off their line of travel. Why we could have whipped them with one hand, tied behind us, and then have licked them with the other, with the other foot, and then have licked them with the other foot, and then have licked them with the other foot, and then have licked them knowledged the kindness of her auditors in a neat speech. Her singing of 'Good Night; God Bless You' was a gem and universally encored. Mr. Edwin Browne as Landry Barhead, although somewhat out of his dramatic sphere, was quiet, natural and refined, and Bevil Ryan looked and acted Didier satisfactorily. The Father Barhead of J. B. Ashton was an energetic and effective impersonation, and Mary McWilliams appeared to advantage as old Fadet. The rest of the cast was in good hands, and every character creditably played. For Miss Pruman's benefit on the 1st 'Rosedale' will be given, with the Dee(Adelaide as Rosa Leigh, and Edwin Browne as Elliot Gray. This combination goes to Washington next (this) week."

THE CAPITOL THEATRE, Albany, N. Y., had but little opposition in the theatrical line during the past week, but almost every evening there was a torchlight procession or political demonstration of some description to contend against, and, as a result, the business was beaut, wrote our correspondent on Nov. 2d, adding that "Miss Dargon opened on Oct. 28th in 'Unmasked,' which held the boards four nights, when 'Guy Mannering' was produced for Miss Dargon's benefit, and was played the balance of the week. Miss Dargon is a great favorite in this city, and received a cordial welcome. She was formerly leading lady at this house under Frank Taylor's management, and has always proved herself to be an actress of ability. The cast of 'Unmasked' was as follows:—Angusta Lamar, Miss Augusta L. Dargon; Albert Lamar, Chas. Waverley; Mr. Sherman, E. L. Mortimer; Mr. Lee, Jas. E. Nugent; Squire Mansfield, Wm. Scallan; Squire Richings, F. J. Morris; William, J. D. Murray; Mr. Speckman, Mr. Quackenbush; Servant, Jas. E. Nelson; Mrs. Sherman, Miss Hannah Bailey; Mary, Miss Ada Powers; and Hester, Little Gracie. Miss Dargon was exceedingly good as the injured wife, and her personation was received with great favor. Mr. Waverley acted in his usually correct manner, while Mr. Nugent, Miss Bailey and the balance acquitted themselves well. Oliver Doud Byron opens on Nov. 4th in 'Across the Continent;' he will also produce 'Ben McCullough' during his engagement, which is for six nights and two matinees."

EDWIN BOOTH made his first appearance at Manchester, [N. H., on Nov. 1st., playing "Hamlet" to one of the largest audiences ever seen there. The acting of Mr. Booth needs no comment, except that he fully sustained his reputation. The support was excellent, Mr. Dorsey Ogden as Claudius, handled his part admirably; Mr. J. S. Rooney's Polonius was fully up to the mark; the Laertes of Mr. Maurice Pike (who has been engaged to fill Mr. Francis Bangs' place), proved him an actor of sterling merit; Mrs. Bella Pateman deserves great credit for her acting of Ophelia; Messrs. J. H. Anderson, Jas. Taylor and R. Pateman, were good in their respective characters. They produce "Richelieu" to-night, and open in Concord the 4th, for two nights; thence to Lowell, Mass., 6th; Salem, 7th; Gloucester, 8th and 9th; Lynn, 11th, and Chelsea, 12th and 13th.....'Tom Thumb' and Com. Nutt's party play in Lawrence, 9th; Gloucester, 11th; Concord, N. H., 12th; Manchester, 13th; Nashua, 14th; Lowell, 15th, and Fitchburg, 16th. Geo. Mitchell is the advance agent.....Nick Forrester's Dramatic Company, with Robert McWade in "Rip Van Winkle," is booked for Manchester the 16th, and Nashua, 17th, our correspondent informs us.

MISS ADA GRAY commenced a six nights' engagement at the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Ont., on Oct. 28th, in a new play written for her by H. A. Weaver, entitled "Whose Wife?" It is a rather clever production, possessing a good plot without being complicated. The language is clear and sprightly and the situations well arrived at, and altogether it may be pronounced a success. In the role of Goldie Ferrell Miss Gray displays histrionic talent of a high order. She made an excellent impression in her first scene and succeeded in carrying the sympathies of the audience with her till the fall of the curtain. The parts of Leonard and Ferrel Bryson were ably sustained by Messrs. Thanehill and Stafford, the latter being especially good in his impersonation of the neglected husband. Another excellently rendered part was the Sandy Capers of Alf. Hudson. J. R. Vernon's Major Ferrell was finely portrayed, his death scene being particularly good. J. R. Spackman gave a vigorous and natural piece of acting as the honest old farmer, Mr. Merritt, and W. Lloyd enacted the part of Christopher Merritt with his usual care and attention to detail. However, the principal feature of the support was the Belle Merritt of Mrs. Vernon, which was an admirable performance, by far the best she has given us this season. Connie Thompson was as revengeful and vindictive as possible as the French maid, Josephine, and the Misses Whitney and Ward as Betty and Susan, delivered the few lines allotted to them with care and attention. 'Whose Wife?' was only announced until Wednesday, but in consequence of the success it attained, the houses being crowded nightly, it retained the boards until Friday, and was also given at the matinee Saturday afternoon, and in the evening, to close Miss Gray's engagement, she will appear as Mlle Cora in 'Article 47,' on which occasion our new low comedian, W. T. Melville, will make his first appearance in Toronto as Potain. On Nov. 4th J. M. Ward and Miss Winnetta Montague commence an engagement, opening in 'The Winning Hand.'"

AMUSEMENTS IN CHICAGO, ILL., are thus reported by our correspondent, under date of Oct. 31st:—"Owing to the political excitement Chicago theatres, generally speaking, are not doing a flourishing business, though the attractions are sufficient to fill the houses. Miss Maggie Mitchell commenced at McVicker's Theatre on Oct. 28th, and presented for the first time here, we think, C. W. Taylerie's play of 'Jane Eyre.' The attendance was sufficient in size to comfortably fill the house, and the popular star received well merited applause. She acquitted herself in the most satisfactory manner, though not exactly suited to the character. She was ably supported by L. R. Shewell, as Lord Rochester; Phosa McAllister, as Georgiana; Mrs. Post and Mrs. Stoneall as Judith Harden and Mrs. Reid, respectively; Sam, although a small part, was well played by Mr. E. Barry. The scenery used in the piece was artistic and effective, while the general mounting was praiseworthy. Miss Mitchell remains another week. Business has averaged as good, if not better, than in any week since the opening.....At the Academy of Music Mrs. Chanfrau continues the attraction and is achieving great success in her admirable rendition of Dora in the drama of that name. She plays the part in a pleasing manner. Mary Morrison found in Miss Annie Waite a charming representative. John Blaisdell was both pleasing and natural as Lasselle. Warner Allen was finely played by John Webster, as was William Allan by W. S. Johnson. The play was well mounted and acted. Business continues good, despite the unusual strong counter attractions.....The stock company took possession of Aiken's Theatre on Oct. 28th, appearing in 'The Ticket-of-Leave Man' before a well filled house. The cast of characters was distributed as follows:—Robt. Brierly, Frank E. Aiken; Hawkshaw, Frank Lawlor; Melter Moss, F. R. Pierce; Green Jones, Moses Fisk; Jas. Dalton, Henry Driscoll; Mr. Gibson, J. F. Deane; Maltby, C. L. Graves; May Edwards, Anna Lanagan; Mrs. Willoughby, Mrs. Clara F. Maeder; Emily St. Evremond, Mollie Maeder, and Sam Willoughby, Ada Gilman. Generally speaking, the piece was acted in a creditable manner, and was well mounted. Mr. Aiken's impersonation of Brierly was a finished piece of acting. Mr. Lawlor made an acceptable Hawkshaw. Moses Fisk displayed considerable humor in the character of Green Jones. Mrs. Lanagan played May Edwards, and Mollie Maeder made an excellent impression in the character of Emily St. Evremond. Sam Willoughby was well taken care of by Ada Gilman. The minor parts were evenly balanced and acceptably enacted. From the acting of the company thus far, we should say it is fully up to the average of first class companies. G. L. Fox is heavily billed for the 4th.....Mafft & Bartholomew's Pantomime troupe continues to please the patrons of Dixon's Amphitheatre. They appeared during the week in 'Jack and Gill'—an excellent pantomime—and are doing their full share of business. The comicalities of Mafft and Bartholomew are sufficient, in themselves, to attract good houses. The specialties introduced in the play are about the same as those of the previous week and are attractive. In addition to the above pantomime, 'Old Macaire' will be presented to-morrow evening for the benefit of Mafft and Bartholomew. The above troupe appears at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, O., on the 4th, for one week; Olympic, St. Louis, Mo., 11th, two weeks; Memphis, Tenn., 25th, one week; Mobile, Ala., Dec. 2d, one week; New Orleans, La., Academy of Music, Dec. 9th, two weeks.....The attendance at Hooley's Opera House this week is uniformly good, and the performances of the Abbott and Kiraify troupe are of a pleasing nature. The bill consists of 'The Three Hunchbacks' and the usual specialties of the Kiraifys, the Jee Brothers, the Gratz Family, etc. Next week 'Humpty Dumpty' in opposition to Fox, at Aiken's.....Manager Beamer from Pittsburgh, Pa., is in this city, visiting his old friends."

THE BUSINESS AT THE TREMONT OPERA HOUSE, Galveston, Texas, the past week, has been very good indeed, while the matinees were crowded, states our correspondent, writing on Oct. 27th, adding that:—"'Money,' The Marble Heart,' 'The Duke's Motto,' 'London Assurance' and 'The Ticket of Leave Man' have been presented, all with marked success. The leading members of the company here immensely popular, the ladies of the company displaying the most elegant toilettes. 'The Sea of Ice,' magnificently gotten up, will be the next attraction. Miss Marie Wellesley will be the first star, opening on Nov. 4th. The artistic manner in which the different plays are placed upon the stage reflects great credit upon the new management."

FROM NEW ORLEANS, LA., we have the appended report of amusements, dated Oct. 30th:—"At the Varieties Theatre, 'Ixion,' which is to be acted during the entire week, was exquisitely mounted and capitally produced to fair houses. Alice Harvey, Mercury, Miss Hamilton as Ixion, Miss Christine as Jupiter, and Miss Grainger as Venus, proved amusing and awakened continued applause. 'Awfully Clever' was admirably rendered by Miss Emmeline, while Miss Alice sang in bewitching style 'Love Among the Roses.' During the final week of their engagement, commencing Monday, Nov. 3d, 'Ixion' will be the attraction. The regular dramatic season will be inaugurated on Nov. 11th, with the Varieties company in 'Diamonds.'.....At the Academy of Music, Miss Marietta Ravel proved the attraction. 'The French Spy,' the first two nights, was well received. Mr. Cotter, as Col. de Courcey, Jas. Pike, as Marshal Beaumont, and Mr. Ryan, as Capt. Didier, ably sustained their parts. Mrs. Sidney Wilkins and Miss Ella Mayer, as Mad. Dubourg and Marie were quite natural and lady-like. Mohammed (Hill) and Achmet Bey (Morton) were exceptionally good. The Sergt. Dubourg of Mr. De Grasse was clever, and Roland Reed as Tony Bavard was droll.....To-night, 'Jartine' will be substituted, to be followed in turn by 'The Wild Cat.'.....The St. Charles Theatre opens on Sunday night, Nov. 2d, with Mr. Jos. Murphy in 'Help.'.....Mr. Placide Canonge, the manager of the Opera House, is expected here from New York on Oct. 31st. The French dramatic company, that is to replace the former operatic troupe, will arrive during the present week, and the initial performance will take place Nov. 7th."

MISS LEO HUDSON and her trained mare "Black Bess" are to play a week's engagement at Harrington's Opera House, Providence, R. I., under the management of Clinton Eddy, commencing Nov. 11th. She has recently added to her repertoire a new sensational equestrian drama by John F. Poole, entitled "Vetari; or, The Steed of Modena." Managers who may desire to procure her services should address Mr. Clinton Eddy as per his card in another column.

C. B. BISHOP commences an engagement at the Capitol Theatre, Albany, N. Y., on Nov. 11th, playing in De Walden's new drama "War Clouds." The Cleveland, O., press speaks as follows of Mr. Bishop's acting:—

"On Monday evening Mr. C. B. Bishop, a comedian of acknowledged ability and reputation, made his first appearance at the Academy in a new drama entitled 'War Clouds,' being a page from the history of our late civil strife, in which the author has made the central figure, 'Our Special Correspondent,' a feature which Mr. Bishop develops with all that happy witticism and nonchalance for which he is proverbial. In him the ideal newspaper correspondent is faithfully personified, and Marion D. Manifold is a character that will long and pleasantly linger in our memory."—Ex.

"ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Mr. Bishop and his drama of 'War Clouds' grow nightly in popular favor, the audience last evening being quite large and manifestly very greatly pleased. As we have before said, the play is one which has many pleasing qualities, and affords a really excellent entertainment, and Mr. Bishop renders his part in it with a very great deal of merit."—Herald.

MINNIE FOSTER'S DRAMATIC COMPANY closed a season of eight weeks on Nov. 2d. Business will be resumed after the election.

PUDDEN AND WILTON'S DRAMATIC COMPANY is billed to play at Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 6th and 7th.

THE STOCK COMPANY have occupied the Richmond, Va., Theatre during the past week. The comedy of "Ours" with the musical burlesque of "Pocahontas" for the after piece, was the bill for Monday evening. Our correspondent, writing on Nov. 2d, says:—"We think the company performed 'Ours' to a better effect during the opening week. In 'Pocahontas' Mr. and Mrs. Eberle were immense. Mrs. E. J. Parker in the title role, gave a poor rendition of the character, although this lady is generally excellent. The rest of the company did very well. 'Caste,' 'Romeo Jaffer Jenkins,' 'Hidden Hand,' 'Peep O'Day Boys,' 'The Streets of New York' and the 'Ticket-of-Leave-Man,' were the plays produced during the week. Friday evening, owing to a misunderstanding somewhere, 'The Streets of New York' was rendered in an imperfect manner. Mr. Eugene Hiltz, in his lightning pictures, appeared for the first time Thursday evening and has proved a success. With the exception of the first night the theatre has been crowded nightly. 'Hidden Hand' for the matinee. Miss Kate Fisher, with her horse Wonder, is announced for Nov. 6th, opening in 'Masepa'.....Rose and Harry Watkins, supported by a very good company, opened at Assembly Hall on Monday, Oct. 28th, with the drama 'Trodden Down; or, Under Two Flags;' Tuesday, 'Kathleen Mavourneen;' Wednesday, 'Hidden Hand;' Thursday, 'Molly Bawn,' and on Friday evening a complimentary benefit was tendered them, when 'Trodden Down' was repeated, by request. The attendance during the week has been large. They will close tonight with 'The Pioneer Patriot.' 'Kathleen Mavourneen' was repeated for the Saturday matinee.....Albert Aiken's Combination are announced to appear at Virginia Hall for two nights, Nov. 8th and 9th. They will be succeeded by the Norris-Norton Combination for three nights, the 11th, 13th and 13th."

MANAGERS desiring to produce John S. Norton's drama, "Niagara," are referred to the opinions of the press published in another column.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS in Memphis, Tenn., are reported as follows by our correspondent, writing on Oct. 29th:—

"The night of Oct. 28th introduced the legitimate drama at the Memphis Theatre, with Miss Jane Coombe as the star, supported by Mr. Chas. Pope and the company from the St. Louis Olympic Theatre. The piece selected for the opening night was 'Romeo and Juliet,' Miss Coombe appearing as Juliet and Mr. Pope as Romeo. On Tuesday evening 'London Assurance' was presented. Wednesday, 'The Lady of Lyons;' Thursday, 'The Hunchback;' Friday, 'The School for Scandal,' and Saturday evening, 'Ingomar.' Miss Coombs opened to a poor house and her audiences did not improve as they should have done. We did not particularly admire Miss Coombs' impersonation of Juliet, but in all the other characters in which she appeared she was good. She is a fine actress and worthy of a better reception than she received. Lady Gay Spanker, Pauline, and Julia, were all well represented, and the support throughout was good. Mr. Chas. Pope made a good Romeo, a better Dazzle, and a still better Orlando Mebourne. He is an actor of ability, and always gives evidence of careful study. Harry Rainford, who appeared as Lawyer Meddle in 'London Assurance,' was excellent. The character seemed to be well suited to him, and he personated it better than any other in which we have seen him. Mr. J. Rand gave a good representation of Chas. Courtly, W. D. Shiels a first-rate personation of Sir Harcourt Courtly, and Mr. Chas. Pope's Dazzle an admirable rendition of Dolly Spanker. Mr. W. J. Hurley as Max Harkaway was fine, and Mr. J. A. Weston as Cool was unexceptional. On Friday evening Miss Marie Bernard appeared as Maria in 'The School for Scandal,' in the absence of Miss Annie Mayhew, who was cast for the part and as usual with her, rendered the part well. Next week we are to have the Royal Japanese troupe.....At the Grand Opera House Mr. Lawrence R. Barrett commenced an engagement on Monday night to a very good audience, and continued to draw well during the week. He was supported by Mr. Frederick Robinson and the whole of the dramatic company attached to the Varieties Theatre, New Orleans. Mr. Barrett is a fine actor must be confessed. His very popularity is an evidence of this. As Cassius, in the play of 'Julius Cæsar,' Mr. Barrett was grand, and his pronunciation is good throughout. Mr. Frederick Robinson appeared to better advantage as Mark Graves in 'Money' than in any other character in which we saw him during the week. In the same play Mr. Jno. W. Morton represented Sir Frederick Blount; Mr. Joseph Barrett, Capt. Graves; Mr. Jno. A. Lang, Sir John Vesey; Mr. J. W. Carner, Stout; J. V. Melton, Lord Glossmore; Miss Jane Rignold, Clara Douglass; Miss E. J. Prue, Lady Franklin; and Miss Georgie Rignold, Georgie Vesey. The support was excellent throughout. On Nov. 4th Charlotte Thompson appears, supported by this same company."

MR. ROBERT FOX does not intend to discard the variety feature of the excellent entertainment now being given at his American Theatre, in Philadelphia; but has merely determined to eschew the ballet, and a few other performances that do not meet with the favor of families who now so extensively patronize his theatre. Variety novelties of a high order will continue to be presented, in conjunction with the dramatic and operatic elements of this well-arranged programmes. Mr. Fox is certainly be commended for his management of the American, his efforts now meeting with their deserved reward in the attendance of the largest audiences of any theatre in that city; audiences composed of ladies and gentlemen, and families of little and big, all of whom testify their delight by the heartiest tokens of approval. In opening this new establishment a couple of years ago, Mr. Fox had to encounter the prejudices of a people who misjudged his intentions, and condemned the enterprise before it had been fairly started; but with a firm resolution to let the result of his labors attest the correctness of his judgment of what the people of Philadelphia desired, he quietly bided his time, until he now finds himself the possessor of a splendid piece of theatrical property, in the best location in the city, while his audiences, always large, are composed of many of the best portions of legitimate amusement in the Quaker City. We shall not be surprised to find Manager Fox adding an extensive museum of curiosities to his establishment at some future day, thus increasing its attractiveness, and making it even more of a family resort, both day and evening, than it is at present. We admire a man who makes a good up-hill fight against heavy odds, and even his opponents must respect that courage which carries him, in the face of every obstacle, to ultimate victory.

A NEW COMEDY of the farcical order was produced at Col. Wood's Museum, Philadelphia, on the evening of Oct. 28th. The piece is entitled "Fun," and was written by Mrs. Martha Lafitte Johnson; it is evidently adapted from the French. A series of comical situations are woven together on a slight thread of plot, the main idea being the search for a bonnet, which the hero's horse has mistaken for fodder, while the owner of it is in the toils of roadside. Miss Susan Galton gave a sprightly rendition of Clara Hopkins, and introduced some charming melodies. Mr. Frank Evans played the part of Bankstock, the hero of the comedy, in a most creditable manner. Mr. Wm. Davidge, Jr., gave frequent evidence of his dramatic ability by his performance of the part of Quill, his make-up being remarkably good. Mr. Charles H. Morton and Miss Annie Hall also appeared, and their respective characters were well sustained. The new piece proved very attractive during the week. Master George displayed much skill in a gymnastic act at the matinees. An exhibition of trained rats, mice and birds, will be given this week. "Fun" will be repeated this week at the evening's performance, and also Wednesday and Saturday matinees, Backstone's drama of "Luke the Laborer" being given at the other matinees. Mr. Robert McWade will shortly appear here in his specialty of "Rip Van Winkle," and "Man and Wife" is announced as being in preparation. The grand dog show will commence on the 11th inst.

A NEW COMEDY, by Mr. Frank Murdoch, entitled "Bohemia," was produced at the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, for the first time, on the 28th of October. The plot involves rather a numerous cast, and as its title indicates, professes to show, in rather an exaggerated manner, the inner life of persons in certain circles of the theatrical and journalistic fraternities. It is by no means a powerful piece, and for the limited success it met with, the larger share of praise is due to the performers, who all exerted themselves in the happiest manner in giving an effective coloring to their various parts, especial praise being due to Mrs. John Drew as Mrs. Aug. Poole, Mr. Barton Hill as Philip Hayne, and Miss Blanche De Bar as Nettie Rawdon. "Uncle's Will" and "Handy Andy" took the place of "Bohemia" on the 2d inst. Mr. H. J. Byron's drama of "Daisy Farm" will be prpduced at this theatre on the 4th inst., for the first time in Philadelphia, in conjunction with the comedy of "Uncle's Will." Miss Georgie Drew will make her second appearance on the stage, on the 9th inst., in the comedy of "Married Life." Mr. Dominick Murray will appear on the 11th inst., in his sensational play of "Escaped from Sing Sing."

AT THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Philadelphia, Mr. Sothern concluded his engagement on the 30th of October, appearing during the last three evenings as David Garrick and as Augustus Thrillington, in J. Madison Morton's "Not if I Know It," the last named being evidently an adaptation of "The Victim of Circumstances." Mr. Sothern had a crowded house at his benefit on the 30th ult., and made a neat and appropriate speech of thanks. "Pygmalion and Galatea," after careful preparation, was produced on the 31st of October, for the first time there. Mrs. Charles Walcot most ably depicted Galatea; Mr. Charles Walcot was an efficient representative of Pygmalion; Miss Jean Anderson, a first appearance here, made a favorable impression as Cynisca. Manager Hall is entitled to very much praise for the stage setting. "Pygmalion and Galatea" will be repeated this week, for the last times, the performance concluding with the petite comedy of "A Pretty Piece of Business." Mr. H. J. Byron's drama of "Haunted Houses" will be soon produced at this theatre.

MR. ELMER RUAN COATES' five act comedy of "Blunders" was produced, for the first time on any stage, on the 28th of October, at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia. The plot is well conceived but poorly carried out, the idea being that some half a dozen men, of different trades and professions, for which they are least fitted by nature and inclination, are loved by as many young ladies on account of their business pursuits, and some amusing situations arise, when each gets into the profession he or she they naturally inclined and the ladies being properly mated. The characters were well sustained, especially those by Messrs. A. D. Bradley and Harry Josepha. "Blunders" did not prove successful and received its last representation at the matinee on the 2d inst., being withdrawn in favor of Bouccicault's "Colleen Bawn" at the evening's performance on that day. This week the drama of "The Ticket of Leave Man" and "The Colleen Bawn" will be produced, in conjunction with the plays of "Money" and "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," the latter to be presented on the 9th inst., on the occasion of the first appearance of Mr. E. L. Davenport this season. "Blunders" will be given for the benefit of its author on the 7th inst.

FRANK MAYO is to play the following consecutive engagements, commencing at New Orleans, La., Nov. 28th, and remaining two weeks: Mobile, Ala., one week; Memphis, Tenn., one week; Louisville, Ky., one week; Indianapolis, Ind., one week; then traveling through the small towns for two weeks, closing at Titusville, Pa.

HOW'S THIS?—We have been requested to give publicity to the following card:—

PLYMOUTH, PA., Oct. 31st, 1873.

FRANK QUEEN, Esq.—DEAR SIR.—We, the undersigned, members of "The Palace of Truth Combination," are compelled to write to you requesting that you will grant us space to narrate the operations of A. L. Parkes, manager of the above named company. Two weeks ago he took eight or ten people from New York city to Harrisburg, to join his company. After playing two weeks, without paying any salaries, he, in company with Miss Teresa Antonino, departed this morning, leaving the company stuck in this place with three days' board bill for sixteen people unpaid; he also took with him the entire receipts for Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and left the company to pay his own and Miss Antonino's board bill. Among the company there are six ladies and three small children.

W. A. GREGSTON,	KATIE BRANDT,
GEORGE GUY, Sr.,	GERTRUDE WILLIAMS,
WILLIE GUY,	JULIA BOSWORTH,
GEORGE GUY, Jr.,	ROSA GOODALL,
GEORGE BACKMAN.	A. R. PERLEY,
	JENNIE MORRIS,

(We trust that there may be some mistake in this, and that Mr. Parkes only temporarily left to arrange for putting the company's affairs on a firmer basis, as is often done in traveling troupes.—ED. CLIPPER.)

AT FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE, Philadelphia, the attendance since our last has been, as usual, very large. The Holman Opera Bouffe Troupe, Guy Linton, leader of comic vocalist, and the Freeman sisters, vocalists, opened here October 28th. The Holman troupe appeared in an English version of "The Grand Duchess," the libretto being supplied by Mr. George Holman. Miss Sallie Holman as the Grand Duchess, Mr. Joseph Brandist as Private Fritz, and Mr. Henry C. Peakes as General Boum being most deserving of mention, for the manner in which they sustained their respective parts. During the opera Mr. Brandist sang "La Marseillaise." Mr. Guy Linton, who made his first appearance in this country, did not excite much enthusiasm in his serio-comic songs, appearing to better advantage, however, in his clever dancing. The Freeman sisters sang "Driven from Home" in a manner admirably illustrative of their musical ability, and were rewarded with several encores. John Forbes in banjo solos, Turner and Lester in songs and dances, R. D. Davies in his act of ventriloquism, and Bobby Bowcomb in the sketch of "Scenes at the Academy," completed the programme. This week, the 1st of the engagement of the Holman troupe, with witness the production of Offenbach's "Orphee aux Enfers," and the appearance of J. H. Mihern, comic vocalist, Miss Kitty Henderson, clog dancer, and Mr. G. F. Moore, Dutch comedian. Guy Linton did not tarry long. Miss Fanny Herring and Sally Frazor open here on the 11th inst.

ABOUT A YEAR AGO, Mr. Wm. Davidge, Jr., and Miss Maggie Harold, who were then connected with the Holman Opera Troupe, concluded to connubialise, and on the 29th of October, in Philadelphia, the young husband was presented by his sweeter and better half with a handsome baby of the feminine gender. Mr. Davidge is a son of the veteran comedian, and is now playing at Col. Wood's Museum, Philadelphia.

Musical.

MR. J. L. CARNCROSS will have a testimonial concert on the 8th inst., at Concert Hall, Philadelphia. He will be assisted by Mrs. Georgiana Harding, Mrs. Josephine Schimpf, Miss Ella Poole and others.

CARL WOLFSOHN'S first orchestral matinee of the season of 1873-73 took place on the 2d inst., at Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, when Mrs. Julia Rosewald, vocalist, made her first appearance in that city.

ANTON RUBENSTEIN, assisted by M'lles Louise Liebhart, Louise Gyrney and Henry Wieniawski, gave three concerts at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the evenings of the 28th, 29th and 30th of October.

THEODORE THOMAS' ORCHESTRA will appear at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the 19th inst.

THE AIMEE OPERA BOUFFE TROUPE open at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the 11th inst., for a season limited to six nights and a matinee.

THE FIRST POPULAR ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, under the leadership of Carl Zerrahn, occurred at Music Hall, Boston, Mass., on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 29th, when Mrs. Barry and Mr. Parker appeared. The second takes place on Nov. 13th.....On Wednesday evening the Lyceum concert was given in Music Hall, at which Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Lisle and Alice Fairman made their first appearance in Boston this season. In addition Addie Phillips, Mrs. West, M. W. Whitney and the Artist's Orchestral Club appeared.....During the concert were the only thing of note will be the first symphony concert by the Howard Musical Association, on Thursday afternoon.

LEONARD GROVER'S combined German and English Opera Troupe was opened for a week at Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, on Nov. 4th.

MISS JENNIE SULLIVAN, a Cincinnati soprano, being about to remove to New York, has been tendered a complimentary benefit to take place on Nov. 7th.

THE PHILHARMONIC QUARTETTE CLUB, assisted by Mrs. W. H. Moore and others, gave a concert on Oct. 31st in that city.

THEODORE THOMAS' TROUPE concertised on Oct. 28th and 29th at Library Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa.

A LEADER OF ORCHESTRA and four musicians are wanted by A. B. ——, whose address is care of this office.

J. S. WULFF, leader of orchestra, advertises that he can be engaged.

SMITH'S BELL RINGERS, and Charley Harrison, humorist performed at Pleasant Plains, Ill., Nov. 1st, Pittsfield, 2d, and are billed ahead as follows:—Griggsville, 4th; Naples, 5th; Bement, 6th; Tolono, 7th, and Arcola, 8th. The business has been excellent good, and the company is headed south for the winter.

THE RUBINSTEIN CONCERTS at Ford's Grand Opera House, Baltimore, Md., on Oct. 31st, Nov. 1st and 2d, were well attended.

SPAULDING'S BELL RINGERS are announced to perform at Lisbon, N. H., Nov. 4th; St. Johnsbury, Vt., 6th; Lindenville, 8th, and Littleton, 10th; Bradford, 11th, and Lebanon, 11th. Business is reported as being good.

HIGH WARD advertises that he is prepared to furnish first class orchestra and brass band for a circus.

A VIOLINIST, who can arrange, and a double bass and a tuba player are wanted for Skiff and Gaylord's Minstrels. See advertisement.

JAMES R. ROBINSON, leader of orchestra, violinist and cornet soloist, advertises that he can be engaged.

LELIA ELLIS' OPERATIC TROUPE performed at Thomasville, Ga., Oct. 29th, 30th and 31st; and went thence to Bainbridge.

THE ARBRI TROUPE attract crowded audiences to the California Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., three nights a week, says our correspondent, writing on Oct. 26th, adding that:—

"The company has been strengthened by engagements with Signor Baccei and Mme. Bianchi, the most effective of the singers who were here during the last season at the Metropolitan. The expense thereby incurred has induced the manager to advance the price of admission to the lower part of the house to $2, and, at first sight, it seemed would act prejudicial to the attendance, but so far the demand for seats has not lessened. 'Faust' was presented on the 20th and again on the 24th. Bacci succeeded Eisenbach upon the latter occasion as Faust, a change which certainly was a decided improvement. Bacci came the music with a great deal of verve, acted gracefully, and his frequent use of the chest C drew forth torrents of applause. Muller was as ordinary Mephistopheles as acting was concerned. Before being announced that the character was to be represented, the audience was disappointed to witness his painful lack of dramatic intensity, for which his sometime fine singing did not altogether compensate. Mme. Arbri does not realize Marguerite in the flesh, but her acting is sensitive and her singing full of delicacy and sweetness. The rendition of the opera, as a whole, was not symmetrical, the orchestra frequently wavering, and the chorus being lifeless and hesitating. In this respect 'Martha,' which was given on the 22d, was no better, and the performance should be noticed principally for the exquisite taste in which 'The Last Rose' was rendered by Arbri. 'Norma' is announced for the 27th, and 'Il Trovatore' for the 29th, with Baccei as Manrico, Muller as Count de Luna, Mme. Fabbri as Leonora, and Mme. Bianchi as Azucena. 'L'Africaine' and 'William Tell' are in rehearsal."

Variety Halls.

THE WESTON SISTERS are at present performing at the Theatre Comique, Detroit, Mich.

SAM'L LANG, Dutch vocalist, can be addressed as per advertisement.

MANAGERS desiring to secure La Petite Benson, infant song and dance artist, and Jennie Benson, cloggist, are referred to Jas. Fish's card in another column.

VARIETY PERFORMERS, with specialties, who can play in a burlesque; musicians, &c., are wanted by Wm. Foote, Jr., who advertises.

E. D. DAVIES, ventriloquist, now performing at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., can be addressed care of his agents, Messrs. Allen and Goldsmith, whose address is care of this office, can be engaged for the winter season.

LOUISE VIVIAN, vocalist, who is blind, advertises for engagements, with responsible managers.

JAMES TAYLOR, "champion comique," with Ada Alexander, soprano, and M'lle Gracie, gymnast, can be engaged for two weeks. Address as per card elsewhere.

AT BERRY'S OPERA HOUSE, Wilkesbarre, Pa., the fresh appearances on Oct. 28th were Miss Caddie Wright, actress, and Frank Clark, banjo performer. Departures, Tommy Turner and Ella Arnold. Those underlined to appear on Nov. 4th are Barton Dent, Shakespearean reader; Chris. Bernard, pantomimist, and Miss Lilian Howe, vocalist.

HARRY CAUSLAND, the musical clown, performed at Cavanagh's Variety Theatre, Scranton, Pa., during the past week, and is to commence a two weeks' engagement at Mortimer's, Philadelphia, Pa., on Nov. 11th; thence to Shelby's, Syracuse, N. Y., on the 25th, to remain two weeks.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Cleveland, O., the chief magnet this fpast week was the "Zig Zags," four in number, who made their first appearance on Oct. 28th. Their performances are good. Miss Maggie Gray and Miss Lizzie LaGrange also appeared. Lew and Frank Collins, in their colored specialty, are very good, and Maggie Gray's songs and dances are par excellence. John and Maggie Fielding recently introduced a new and original musical sketch. Foley and Wade took their departure Nov. 30th, for Providence, R. I. John and Maggie Fielding go to Pittsburgh, Pa., and Maggie Gray to Sinn and Woods', Chicago, Ill., on Nov. 4th. Business has been good.....The Cleveland Opera House still hangs its banners on the outer walls.' Manager Wild made his first appearance in five years on Oct. 28th, as Sam in "The Happy Couple," and was received with applause. Healy and Conway, John F. Fisher and Miss Ella Saunders also appeared on the same date. John Garrick and Augustus Thrillington, in J. Madison Morton's "Not if I Know It," the last named being evidently an adaptation of "The Victim of Circumstances." Mr. Sothern had a crowded house at his benefit on the 30th ult., and made a neat and appropriate speech of thanks. "Pygmalion and Galatea," after careful preparation, was produced on the 31st of October, for the first time there. Mrs. Charles Walcot most ably depicted Galatea; Mr. Charles Walcot was an efficient representative of Pygmalion; Miss Jean Anderson, a first appearance here, made a favorable impression as Cynisca. Manager Hall is entitled to very much praise for the stage setting. "Pygmalion and Galatea" will be repeated this week, for the last times, the performance concluding with the petite comedy of "A Pretty Piece of Business." Mr. H. J. Byron's drama of "Haunted Houses" will be soon produced at this theatre.

MR. ELMER RUAN COATES' five act comedy of "Blunders" was produced, for the first time on any stage, on the 28th of October, at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia. The plot is well conceived but poorly carried out, the idea being that some half a dozen men, of different trades and professions, for which they are least fitted by nature and inclination, are loved by as many young ladies on account of their business pursuits, and some amusing situations arise, when each gets into the profession he or she they naturally inclined and the ladies being properly mated. This week the drama of "The Ticket of Leave Man" and "The Colleen Bawn" will be produced, in conjunction with the plays of "Money" and "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," the latter to be presented on the 9th inst., on the occasion of the first appearance of Mr. E. L. Davenport this season. "Blunders" will be given for the benefit of its author on the 7th inst.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS TO THE PROPRIETOR.
* * * * Its accoustics are excellent, and M'lle Nilsson and all the members of my troupe are very much pleased with it. MAX STRAKOSCH.
Yours, very truly,
* * * * * You have certainly given the Columbus people the best furnished and finished stage and appointments they have ever seen in their own city, while the auditorium must prove as advantageous respecting capacity sight, ventilation, warmth, &c., as any community can desire. Yours, truly, JOHN A. ELLSLER.
* * * * * If I should again visit Columbus, I should most assuredly endeavor to play in your house again. The situation is most excellent, and in every way desirable for a first class entertainment.
Yours, very sincerely, MARK SMITH.
* * * * * I take great pleasure in recommending the new Athenæum as being infinitely the best Theatre, both as regards location and accessories, in the city of Columbus, having given both houses a fair and impartial trial. Our business here I consider immense. Yours, sincerely,
FRANK P. DOBSON, Manager Wallace Sisters.
* * * * * Its seating capacity and voluminous stock of scenery are all that one could wish, and I most cheerfully recommend it to any and all managers of first class combinations who may in the future wish to visit your beautiful city, as a most complete theatre in every respect. Yours truly, GEO. L. FOX.
